"(A) 'You are not required to complete this agreement merely because you have received these disclosures or have signed a loan application.'

"(B) 'If you obtain this loan, the lender will have a mortgage on your home. You could lose your home, and any money you have put into it, if you do not meet your obligations under the loan.'.

Each annual interest rate shall be based on a projected total future loan balance under a projected appreciation rate for the dwelling and a term for the mortgage. The disclosure shall include—

"(1) statements of the annual interest rates for not less than 3 projected appreciation rates and not less than 3 loan periods, as determined by the Board, including—

SEC. 210. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON TAXATION OF SMALL BUSINESS LOAN INVESTMENT CONDUITS.

(1) the purpose of facilitating the securitization of small business loans and leases or personal property through the use of small business loan investment conduits and the development of a secondary market in small business loans and leases of personal property;

(2) differences in the nature of qualifying mortgages in a real estate mortgage investment conduit and small business loans and leases of personal property;

Subtitle B—Small Business Capital Enhancement

SEC. 251. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) small business concerns are a vital part of the economy, accounting for the majority of new jobs, new products, and new services created in the United States;

(2) adequate access to debt capital is a critical component for small business development, productivity, expansion, and success in the United States;

(3) commercial banks are the most important suppliers of debt capital to small business concerns in the United States;

(4) commercial banks and other depository institutions have various incentives to minimize their risk in financing small business concerns;

(5) as a result of such incentives, many small business concerns with economically sound financing needs are unable to obtain access to needed debt capital;

(6) the small business capital access programs implemented by certain States are a flexible and efficient tool to assist financial institutions in providing access to needed debt capital for many small business concerns in a manner consistent with safety and soundness regulations;

(7) a small business capital access program would complement other programs which assist small business concerns in obtaining access to capital; and

(8) Federal policy can stimulate and accelerate efforts by States to implement small business capital access programs by providing an incentive to States, while leaving the administration of such programs to each participating State.

(b) PURPOSES.—By encouraging States to implement administratively efficient capital access programs that encourage commercial banks and other depository institutions to provide access to debt capital for a broad portfolio of small business concerns, and thereby promote a more efficient and effective debt market, the purposes of this subtitle are—

(1) to promote economic opportunity and growth;

(2) to create jobs;

(3) to promote economic efficiency;

(4) to enhance productivity; and

(5) to spur innovation.

(d) EARNED INCOME AND INTEREST.—Interest or income earned on the funds credited to a reserve fund shall be deemed to be part of the reserve fund, except that a participating State may, as further specified in the participation agreement, provide authority for the participating State to withdraw some or all of such interest or income earned.

Such claim may also include accrued interest and out-of-pocket expenses, if and to the extent provided for under the participation agreement.

If the enrolled loan for which the claim has been filed—

(A) is not an early loan, such payment shall be deemed fully to satisfy the claim, and the participating financial institution shall have no other or further right to receive any amount from the reserve fund with respect to such claim; or

(B) is an early loan, such payment shall not be deemed fully to satisfy the claim of the participating financial institution, and at such time as the remaining balance of the claim does not exceed 75 percent of the balance in the reserve fund, the participating State shall, upon the request of the participating financial institution, pay any remaining amount of the claim.

(n) DENIAL OF CLAIMS.—A participating State may deny a claim if a representation or warranty made by the participating financial institution to the participating State at the time that the loan was filed for enrollment or at the time that the claim was submitted was known by the participating financial institution to be false.

(C) may provide that if—

(i) a participating financial institution makes a loan to a borrower that is a refinancing of a loan previously made to the borrower by the participating financial institution or an affiliate of the participating financial institution;

(ii) such prior loan was not enrolled in the Program; and

(iii) additional or new financing is extended by the participating financial institution as part of the refinancing,

the participating financial institution may file the loan for enrollment, with the amount to be covered under the Program not to exceed the amount of any additional or new financing; and

(D) may include additional restrictions on the eligibility of loans or borrowers that are not inconsistent with the provisions and purposes of this subtitle.

(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, the terms "executive officer", "director", "principal shareholder", "immediate family", and "related interest" refer to the same relationship to a participating financial institution as the relationship described in part 215 of title 12 of the Code of Federal Regulations, or any successor to such part.

Any such termination shall be prospective only, and shall not apply to amounts of loans enrolled under the Program prior to such termination.

The participation agreement may provide that, if, for any consecutive period of not less than 24 months, the aggregate outstanding balance of all enrolled loans for a participating financial institution is continually less than the outstanding balance in the reserve fund for that participating financial institution, the participating State, in its discretion, may withdraw an amount from the reserve fund to bring the balance in the reserve fund down to the outstanding balance of all such enrolled loans.

(s) GRANDFATHERED PROVISION.—

(1) SPECIAL TREATMENT OF PREMIUM CHARGES.—Notwithstanding subsection (b) or (d), the participation agreement, if explicitly authorized by a statute enacted by the State before the date of enactment of this Act, may allow a participating financial institution to treat the premium charges paid by the participating financial institution and the borrower into the reserve fund, and interest or income earned on funds in the reserve fund that are deemed to be attributable to such premium charges, as assets of the participating financial institution for accounting purposes, subject to withdrawal by the participating financial institution only—

(A) for the payment of claims approved by the participating State in accordance with this section; and

(B) upon the participating financial institution's withdrawal from authority to make new loans under the Program.

(2) PAYMENT OF POST-WITHDRAWAL CLAIMS.—After any withdrawal of assets from the reserve fund pursuant to paragraph (1)(B), any future claims filed by the participating financial institution on loans remaining in its capital access program portfolio shall only be paid from funds remaining in the reserve fund to the extent that, in the aggregate, such claims exceed the sum of the amount of such withdrawn assets, and interest on that amount, imputed at the same rate as income would have accrued had the amount not been withdrawn.

(3) CONDITIONS FOR TERMINATING SPECIAL AUTHORITY.—If the Secretary determines that the inclusion in a participation agreement of the provisions authorized by this subsection is resulting in the enrollment of loans under the Program that are likely to have been made without assistance provided under this subtitle, the Secretary may notify the participating State that henceforth, the Secretary will only make reimbursements to the State under section 257 with respect to a loan if the participation agreement between the participating State and each participating financial institution has been amended to conform with this section, without exercise of the special authority granted by this subsection.

SEC. 348. OFFSET OF COSTS OF CERTAIN PROGRAMS.

(a) HUD MULTIFAMILY HOUSING DISPOSITION PROCESS.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(A) the portfolio of multifamily housing project mortgages insured by the FHA is severely troubled and at risk of default, requiring the Secretary to increase loss reserves from $5,500,000,000 in 1991 to $11,900,000,000 in 1992 to cover estimated future losses;

(B) the inventory of multifamily housing projects owned by the Secretary has more than tripled since 1989, and, by the end of 1993, may exceed 75,000 units;

(C) the cost to the Federal Government of owning and maintaining multifamily housing projects escalated to approximately $250,000,000 in fiscal year 1992;

(D) the inventory of multifamily housing projects subject to mortgages held by the Secretary has increased dramatically, to more than 2,400 mortgages, and approximately half of these mortgages, with over 230,000 units, are delinquent;

(E) the inventory of insured and formerly insured multifamily housing projects is rapidly deteriorating, endangering tenants and neighborhoods;

(F) over 5 million families today have a critical need for housing that is affordable and habitable; and

(G) the current statutory framework governing the disposition of multifamily housing projects effectively impedes the Government's ability to dispose of properties, protect tenants, and ensure that projects are maintained over time.

"SEC. 203. MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSITION OF MULTIFAMILY HOUSING PROJECTS.

"(a) GOALS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (in this section referred to as the 'Secretary') shall manage or dispose of multifamily housing projects that are owned by the Secretary or that are subject to a mortgage held by the Secretary in a manner that—

"(1) is consistent with the National Housing Act and this section;

"(2) will protect the financial interests of the Federal Government; and

"(3) will, in the least costly fashion among reasonable available alternatives, further the goals of—

"(A) preserving housing so that it can remain available to and affordable by low-income persons;

"(B) preserving and revitalizing residential neighborhoods;

"(C) maintaining existing housing stock in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition;

"(D) minimizing the involuntary displacement of tenants;

"(E) maintaining housing for the purpose of providing rental housing, cooperative housing, and homeownership opportunities for low-income persons; and

"(F) minimizing the need to demolish multifamily housing projects.

The Secretary, in determining the manner in which a project is to be managed or disposed of, may balance competing goals relating to individual projects in a manner that will further the purposes of this section.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the following definitions shall apply:

"(1) MULTIFAMILY HOUSING PROJECT.—The term 'multifamily housing project' means any multifamily rental housing project which is, or prior to acquisition by the Secretary was, assisted or insured under the National Housing Act, or was subject to a loan under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959.

"(c) MANAGEMENT OR DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.—

"(1) DISPOSITION TO PURCHASERS.—The Secretary is authorized, in carrying out this section, to dispose of a multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary on a negotiated, competitive bid, or other basis, on such terms as the Secretary deems appropriate considering the low-income character of the project and the requirements of subsection (a), to a purchaser determined by the Secretary to be capable of—

"(A) satisfying the conditions of the disposition;

"(B) implementing a sound financial and physical management program that is designed to enable the project to meet anticipated operating and repair expenses to ensure that the project will remain in decent, safe, and sanitary condition;

when a vacancy occurs, the owner shall lease the available unit to a family eligible for assistance under section 8; and

"(iii) the Secretary shall take actions to ensure the availability and affordability, as defined in paragraph (3)(B), for the remaining useful life of the project, as defined by the Secretary, of any unit located in any project referred to in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (b)(2) that does not otherwise receive project-based assistance under this subparagraph. The Secretary shall take action under this paragraph only after making a determination that there is available in the area an adequate supply of habitable affordable housing for low-income families. Actions taken pursuant to this paragraph may be taken in connection with not more than 10 percent of the aggregate number of units in subsidized or formerly subsidized projects disposed of by the Secretary annually.

"(3) OTHER ASSISTANCE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with the authority provided under the National Housing Act, reduce the selling price, apply use or rent restrictions on certain units, or provide other financial assistance to the owners of multifamily housing projects that are acquired by a purchaser other than the Secretary at foreclosure, or after sale by the Secretary, on terms which will ensure that—

"(i) at least those units otherwise required to receive project-based section 8 assistance pursuant to subparagraphs (A), (B), or (D) of paragraph (1) are available to and affordable by low-income persons; and

"(ii) for the remaining useful life of the project, as defined by the Secretary, there shall be in force such use or rent restrictions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(ii) 5 percent of the total number of units in multifamily housing projects that are disposed of by the Secretary during any 1-year period to be used in any manner, if the Secretary and the unit of general local government or area-wide governing body determine that such use will further fair housing, community development, or neighborhood revitalization goals.

"(B) DISPLACEMENT PROTECTION.—The Secretary shall make available tenant-based rental assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 to any tenant displaced as a result of actions taken by the Secretary pursuant to subparagraph (A), and the Secretary shall take such actions as the Secretary determines necessary to ensure the successful use of any tenant-based assistance.

"(g) AUTHORIZATION OF USE OR RENT RESTRICTIONS IN UNSUBSIDIZED PROJECTS.—In carrying out the goals specified in subsection (a), the Secretary may require certain units in unsubsidized projects to contain use or rent restrictions providing that such units will be available to and affordable by very low-income persons for the remaining useful life of the property, as defined by the Secretary.

"(h) CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) CONTRACT TERM.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Contracts for project-based rental assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 provided pursuant to this section shall be for a term of not more than 15 years; and

"(B) CONTRACT TERM OF LESS THAN 15 YEARS.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), to the extent that units receive project-based assistance for a contract term of less than 15

"(2) CONTRACT RENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall set contract rents for section 8 project-based rental contracts issued under this section at levels that, in conjunction with other resources available to the purchaser, provide for the necessary costs of rehabilitation of such project and do not exceed the percentage of the existing housing fair market rents for the area (as determined by the Secretary under section 8(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937) as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(B) UP-FRONT GRANTS AND LOANS.—If such an approach is determined to be more cost-effective, the Secretary may utilize the budget authority provided for project-based section 8 contracts issued under this section to—

"(i) provide project-based section 8 rental assistance; and

"(ii)(I) provide up-front grants for the necessary cost of rehabilitation; or

"(II) pay for any cost to the Government, as defined in section 502 of the Congressional Budget Act, for loans made pursuant to subsection (f)(1).

"(i) DISPOSITION PLAN.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Prior to the sale of a multifamily housing project that is owned by the Secretary, the Secretary shall develop a disposition plan for the project that specifies the minimum terms and conditions of the Secretary for disposition of the project, the initial sales price that is acceptable to the Secretary, and the assistance that the Secretary plans to make available to a prospective purchaser in accordance with this section. The initial sales price shall reflect the intended use of the property after sale.

"(2) COMMUNITY AND TENANT INPUT INTO DISPOSITION PLANS AND SALES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall develop procedures to obtain appropriate and timely input into disposition plans from officials of the unit of general local government affected, the community in which the project is situated, and the tenants of the project.

"(B) TENANT ORGANIZATIONS.—The Secretary shall develop procedures to facilitate, where feasible and appropriate, the sale of multifamily housing projects to existing tenant organizations with demonstrated capacity or to public or nonprofit entities which represent or are affiliated with existing tenant organizations.

"(C) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—

"(i) USE OF FUNDS.—To carry out the procedures developed under subparagraphs (A) and (B), the Secretary is authorized to provide technical assistance, directly or indirectly, and to use amounts appropriated for technical assistance under the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987, the Low-Income Housing Preservation and Resident Homeownership Act of 1990, subtitle B of title IV of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, or under this section for the provision of technical assistance under this section.

"(j) RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL.—

"(1) PROCEDURE.—

"(A) NOTIFICATION BY SECRETARY OF THE ACQUISITION OF TITLE.—Not later than 30 days after acquiring title to a project, the Secretary shall notify the unit of general local government and the State agency or agencies designated by the Governor of the acquisition of such title.

"(B) EXPRESSION OF INTEREST.—Not later than 45 days after receiving notification from the Secretary under subparagraph (A), the unit of general local government or designated State agency may submit to the Secretary a preliminary expression of interest in the project. The Secretary may take such actions as may be necessary to require the unit of general local government or designated State agency to substantiate such interest.

"(C) TIMELY EXPRESSION OF INTEREST.—If the unit of general local government or designated State agency has expressed interest in the project before the expiration of the 45-day period referred to in subparagraph (B), and has substantiated such interest if requested, the Secretary, upon approval of a disposition plan for a project, shall notify the unit of general local government and designated State agency of the terms and conditions of the disposition plan and give the unit of general local government or designated State agency not more than 90 days after the date of such notification to make an offer to purchase the project.

"(D) NO TIMELY EXPRESSION OF INTEREST.—If the unit of general local government or designated State agency does not express interest before the expiration of the 45-day period referred to in subparagraph (B), or does not substantiate an expressed interest if requested, the Secretary, upon approval of a disposition plan, may offer the project for sale to any interested person or entity.

"(2) ACCEPTANCE OF OFFERS.—Where the Secretary has given the unit of general local government or designated State agency 90 days to make an offer to purchase the project, the Secretary shall accept an offer that complies with the terms and conditions of the disposition plan. The Secretary may accept an offer that does not comply with the terms and conditions of the disposition plan if the Secretary determines that the offer will further the goals specified in subsection (a) by actions that include extension of the duration of low-income affordability restrictions or otherwise restructuring the transaction in a manner that enhances the long-term affordability for low-income persons. The Secretary shall, in particular, have discretion to reduce the initial sales price in exchange for the extension of low-income affordability restrictions beyond the period of assistance contemplated by the attachment of assistance pursuant to subsection (e). If the Secretary and the unit of general local government or designated State agency cannot reach agreement within 90 days, the Secretary may offer the project for sale to the general public.

"(3) PURCHASE BY UNIT OF GENERAL LOCAL GOVERNMENT OR DESIGNATED STATE AGENCY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a unit of general local government (including a public housing agency) or designated State agency may purchase a subsidized or formerly subsidized project in accordance with this subsection.

"(ii) if the unit of general local government or designated State agency expresses interest in the project before the expiration of the 45-day period, and substantiates such interest if requested, 90 days from the date of notification of the terms and conditions of the disposition plan to make an offer to purchase the project.

"(k) DISPLACEMENT OF TENANTS AND RELOCATION ASSISTANCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Whenever tenants will be displaced as a result of the disposition of, or repairs to, a multifamily housing project that is owned by the Secretary (or for which the Secretary is mortgagee in possession), the Secretary shall identify tenants who will be displaced, and shall notify all such tenants of their pending displacement and of any relocation assistance which may be available. In the case of a multifamily housing project that is not owned by the Secretary (and for which the Secretary is not mortgagee in possession), the Secretary shall require the owner of the project to carry out the requirements of this paragraph.

"(l) MORTGAGE AND PROJECT SALES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not approve the sale of any loan or mortgage held by the Secretary (including any loan or mortgage owned by the Government National Mortgage Association) on any subsidized project or formerly subsidized project, unless such sale is made as part of a transaction that will ensure that such project will continue to operate at least until the maturity date of such loan or mortgage, in a manner that will provide rental housing on terms at least as advantageous to existing and future tenants as the terms required by the program under which the loan or mortgage was made or insured prior to the assignment of the loan or mortgage on such project to the Secretary.

"(2) SALE OF CERTAIN PROJECTS.—The Secretary may not approve the sale of any subsidized project—

"(A) that is subject to a mortgage held by the Secretary; or

"(B) if the sale transaction involves the provision of any additional subsidy funds by the Secretary or a recasting of the mortgage, unless such sale is made as part of a transaction that will ensure that such project will continue to operate at least until the maturity date of the loan or mortgage, in a manner that will provide rental housing on terms at least as advantageous to existing and future tenants as the terms required by the program under which the loan or mortgage was made or insured prior to the proposed sale of the project.

"(3) MORTGAGE SALES TO STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—Notwithstanding any provision of law that may require competitive sales or bidding, the Secretary may carry out negotiated sales of subsidized or formerly subsidized mortgages held by the Secretary, without the competitive selection of purchasers or intermediaries, to units of general local government or State agencies, or groups of investors that include at least one such unit of general local government or State agency, if the negotiations are conducted with such agencies, except that—

"(A) the terms of any such sale shall include the agreement of the purchasing agency or unit of local government or State agency to act as mortgagee or owner of a beneficial interest in such mortgages, in a manner consistent with maintaining the projects that are subject to such mortgages for occupancy by the general tenant group intended to be served by the applicable mortgage insurance program, including, to the extent the Secretary determines appropriate, authorizing such unit of local government or State agency to enforce the provisions of any regulatory agreement or other program requirements applicable to the related projects; and

"(B) the sales prices for such mortgages shall be, in the determination of the Secretary, the best prices that may be obtained for such mortgages from a unit of general local government or State agency, consistent with the expectation and intention that the projects financed will be retained for use under the applicable mortgage insurance program for the life of the initial mortgage insurance contract.

"(4) SALE OF MORTGAGES COVERING UNSUBSIDIZED PROJECTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may sell mortgages held on unsubsidized projects on such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(11) a description of actions undertaken pursuant to this section, including—

"(E) the extent to which such public or private entities or States include tenants of multifamily housing projects in the disposition planning for such projects;

"(13) a description of the activities carried out under subsection (j) during the preceding year; and

"(14) a description and assessment of the rules, guidelines, and practices governing the Department's management of multifamily housing projects that are owned by the Secretary (or for which the Secretary is mortgagee in possession) as well as the steps that the Secretary has taken or plans to take to improve the management performance of the Department.".

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The Secretary shall, by notice published in the Federal Register, which shall take effect upon publication, establish such requirements as may be necessary to implement the amendments made by this subsection. The notice shall invite public comments, and the Secretary shall issue final regulations based on the initial notice, taking into account any public comments received.

(2) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to establish a registration requirement for businesses engaged in providing check cashing, currency exchange, or money transmitting or remittance services, or issuing or redeeming money orders, travelers' checks, and other similar instruments to assist the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney General, and other supervisory and law enforcement agencies to effectively enforce the criminal, tax, and regulatory laws and prevent such money transmitting businesses from engaging in illegal activities.

"(1) according to the most recent report under section 3602 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (or update thereof); or

"(2) based on more recent information that the Secretary deems appropriate.

"(c) DETERMINING WHETHER DENIAL OF NATIONAL TREATMENT HAS SIGNIFICANT ADVERSE EFFECT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall determine whether the denial of national treatment to United States banking organizations by a foreign country identified under subsection (b) has a significant adverse effect on such organizations.

"(2) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—In determining whether and to what extent a foreign country denies national treatment to United States banking organizations, and in determining the effect of any such denial on such banking organizations, the Secretary shall consider appropriate factors, including—

"(A) the size of the foreign country's markets for the financial services involved, and the extent to which United States banking organizations operate or seek to operate in those markets;

"(C) shall inform State bank supervisors of the publication of that determination.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR COUNTRIES THAT ARE PARTIES TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS GOVERNING FINANCIAL SERVICES.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to a foreign country to the extent that any authority under that paragraph would permit action to be taken that would be inconsistent with a bilateral or multilateral agreement (including any dispute resolution procedures contained in such agreement) that governs financial services that—

"(i) would be so unlikely to result in progress toward according national treatment to United States banking organizations as to be a waste of effort; or

TITLE VI—NATIONAL FLOOD INSURANCE REFORM

SEC. 601. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "National Flood Insurance Reform Act of 1994".

SEC. 602. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the 4 principal objectives of the National Flood Insurance Program are to limit increasing flood control and disaster relief expenditures, to provide a prefunded mechanism to more fully indemnify victims of flood-related disasters, to limit unwise development in floodplains, and to provide affordable Federal flood insurance for structures located in areas of special flood hazards;

(2) since 1968, the National Flood Insurance Program has reduced the need for taxpayer funded disaster assistance and has been a factor in motivating local government mitigation efforts.

(3) repetitively damaged properties represent a substantial problem for the National Flood Insurance Program, with over 40 percent of all flood insurance claims made on properties that have been damaged more than once;

(4) the problem of erosion warrants greater analysis;

(5) reforms in the National Flood Insurance Program are essential to increase participation in the Program, make the Program more actuarially sound, decrease the risk of losses to the United States Treasury, and address the problem of properties repetitively damaged by floods;

(6) a Federal flood insurance program that combines predisaster mitigation efforts together with an insurance and compliance program will reduce the physical and economic effects of flood-related damage on the Federal Government, State and local governments, and individuals;

(7) requiring regulated lending institutions, government agencies, and government-sponsored enterprises to make sure that flood insurance coverage is purchased on all properties in areas of special flood hazards in participating communities will increase compliance with the program, and increase the pool of funds, thereby decreasing the impact on the National Flood Insurance Fund of individual flood events;

(8) incentives in the form of reduced premium rates for flood insurance under the National Flood Insurance Program should be provided in communities that have adopted and enforced exemplary or particularly effective measures for comprehensive floodplain management; and

(9) these community-based, individual mitigation, and loss prevention methods and incentives should be incorporated into the National Flood Insurance Program.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. FORD:

S. 1953. A bill to amend the Flood Control Act of 1968 to prohibit the imposition of certain fees for the use of developed recreation sites and facilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

FLOOD CONTROL ACT OF 1968 AMENDMENT ACT OF 1994

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill prohibiting the Corps of Engineers from charging user fees at underdeveloped or lightly developed lake facilities in Kentucky and other States. The corps now charges user fees at highly developed facilities requiring round-the-clock maintenance and supervision of corps personnel. Clearly, user fees are proper in these situations.

But beginning in May of this year, the corps proposes to establish user fees for beaches, boat ramps, and other unmaintained facilities that are currently free of charge. For many hard-working families in my State, you may as well put up "closed for the season" signs. All across my State—and I am sure my colleagues' own States—there are families who put in a hard day's work, pay their bills, put a roof over the family's head and food on the table. Once they have done all that, there is not much left in the family budget for an expensive vacation.

Because States understood there was a need for easily accessible, affordable places for families to vacation, they gave up land so that many of these corps-maintained lakes could be built. I think all would agree that the citizens whose tax dollars built those facilities and whose tax dollars maintain these facilities should be able to use these facilities.

Mr. President, my legislation will assure the park gates will not be closed for any tourist, regardless how big or how small their vacation budget might be.

I might say, the distinguished Congressman from the First District in Kentucky has filed a companion bill in the House, and I hope my colleagues will join me.

I send the bill to the desk and ask that it be appropriately referred. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I will say to my friend from Kentucky that I have not seen the bill, but I am inclined to be on it with him. I see all over the place signs that we are going to start charging for unimproved access to various recreation forests, national recreation areas, and other kinds of things.

I hope that it puts in the back of his mind a little bit the thought as to what it is to deal with unimproved facilities and that he has a gentle thought at grazers as the vote comes down.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, without the Senator losing his right to the floor, I do have a general thought. It just seems as if they were charged 70 percent, and it would be to maintain it. Where you have unmaintained boat ramps, picnic areas, $2 to take your boat to put it in the water, $1 to take your family, each person, or so much per carload to go in, it seems to me, as we say down in Kentucky, it is too much sugar for the sand.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I say to the Senator, I agree with him. We are seeing signs of it all over our State. I am seeing signs of it in various published statements around and about. I think it is time for Congress to speak to it.

It is well and good to spend money on improving things and providing people with something for the value which they are being asked to pony up. However, if there is no value at all, it seems genuinely unfair to ask people to pay for that.

(2) Section 101(a)(3)(B) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371(a)(3)(B)) is amended by inserting ", or as provided for under paragraph (5) of this subsection," immediately after "subsection,".

(e) AUTHORIZATION FOR HARASSMENT OF SMALL NUMBERS OF MARINE MAMMALS.—Section 101(a)(5) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371(a)(5)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by inserting "or harassment" immediately after "taking" each place it appears; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D)(i) Upon request therefor by citizens of the United States who engage in a specified activity (other than commercial fishing) within a specific geographic region, the Secretary shall authorize, for periods of not more than one year, subject to such conditions as the Secretary may specify, the incidental, but not intentional, harassment of small numbers of marine mammals of a species or population stock by such citizens while engaging in that activity within that region if the Secretary finds that such harassment during each period concerned—

"(I) will have a negligible impact on such species or stock; and

"(II) will not have an unmitigable adverse impact on the availability of such species or stock for taking for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b), or section 109(f), or pursuant to a cooperative agreement under section 120.

"(ii) The authorization for such activity shall prescribe, where applicable—

"(I) permissible methods of taking pursuant to such activity, and other means of effecting the least practicable impact on such species or stock and its habitat, paying particular attention to rookeries, mating grounds, and areas of similar significance, and on the availability of such species or stock for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b), or section 109(f), or pursuant to a cooperative agreement under section 120;

"(II) the measures that the Secretary determines are necessary to ensure no unmitigable adverse impact on the availability of the species or stock for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b), or section 109(f), or pursuant to cooperative agreement under section 120; and

"(III) requirements pertaining to the monitoring and reporting of such taking, including requirements for the independent peer review of proposed monitoring plans or other research proposals where the proposed activity may affect the availability of a species or stock for taking for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b), or section 109(f), or pursuant to a cooperative agreement under section 120.

"(iii) The Secretary shall publish a proposed authorization not later than 45 days after receiving an application under this subparagraph and request public comment through notice in the Federal Register, newspapers of general circulation, and appropriate electronic media and to all locally affected communities for a period of 30 days after publication. Not later than 45 days after the close of the public comment period, if the Secretary makes the findings set forth in clause (i), the Secretary shall issue an authorization with appropriate conditions to meet the requirements of clause (ii).

"(iv) The Secretary shall modify, suspend, or revoke an authorization if the Secretary finds that the provisions of clauses (i) and (ii) are not being met.

"(v) A person conducting an activity for which an authorization has been granted under this subparagraph shall not be subject to the penalties of this Act for harassment that occurs in compliance with such authorization."

(f) PERMITS CONCERNING ENDANGERED OR THREATENED MARINE MAMMAL STOCKS.—Section 101(a)(5) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371(a)(5)), as amended by this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E)(i) During any period of three consecutive years, the Secretary shall allow the incidental, but not the intentional, taking or harassment by persons using vessels of the United States or vessels which have valid fishing permits issued by the Secretary in accordance with section 204(b) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1824(b)), while engaging in commercial fishing operations, of marine mammals from a species or stock designated as depleted because of its listing as an endangered or threatened species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.) if the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for public comment, determines that—

"(I) the incidental mortality and serious injury from commercial fisheries will have a negligible impact on such species or stock;

"(II) a recovery plan has been developed or is being developed for such species or stock pursuant to the Endangered Species Act of 1973; and

"(III) where required under section 118, a monitoring program is established under subsection (d) of such section, vessels engaged in such fisheries are registered in accordance with such section, and an incidental take reduction plan has been developed or is being developed for such species or stock.

"(ii) Upon a determination by the Secretary that the requirements of clause (i) have been met, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a list of those fisheries for which such determination was made, and, for vessels required to register under section 118, shall issue an appropriate permit for each authorization granted under such section to vessels to which this paragraph applies. Vessels engaged in a fishery included in the notice published by the Secretary under this clause which are not required to register under section 118 shall not be subject to the penalties of this Act for the incidental taking of marine mammals to which this paragraph applies, so long as the owner or master of such vessel reports any incidental mortality or injury of such marine mammals to the Secretary in accordance with section 118.

"(iii) If, during the course of the commercial fishing season, the Secretary determines that the level of incidental mortality or serious injury from commercial fisheries for which a determination was made under clause (i) has resulted or is likely to result in an impact that is more than negligible on the endangered or threatened species or stock, the Secretary shall use the emergency authority granted under section 118 to protect such species or stock, and may modify any permit granted under this paragraph as necessary.

"(iv) The Secretary may suspend for a time certain or revoke a permit granted under this subparagraph only if the Secretary determines that the conditions or limitations set forth in such permit are not being substantially complied with. The Secretary may amend or modify, after notice and opportunity for public comment, the list of fisheries published under clause (ii) whenever the Secretary determines there has been a substantial change in the information or conditions used to determine such list.

"(v) Sections 103 and 104 shall not apply to the taking of marine mammals under the authority of this subparagraph.".

(g) IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN PRODUCTS.—Section 101(a) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6)(A) A marine mammal product may be imported into the United States if the product—

"(i) was owned and exported by any person in conjunction with travel outside the United States;

"(ii) was acquired outside of the United States as part of a cultural exchange by an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska; or

"(iii) is owned by a Native inhabitant of Russia, Canada, or Greenland and is imported for noncommercial purposes in conjunction with travel within the United States or as part of a cultural exchange with an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska.

"(B) For the purposes of this paragraph, the term—

"(i) 'Native inhabitant of Russia, Canada, or Greenland' means a person residing in Russia, Canada, or Greenland who is related by blood, is a member of the same clan or ethnological grouping, or shares a common heritage with an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska; and

"(ii) 'cultural exchange' means the sharing or exchange of ideas, information, gifts, clothing, or handicrafts between an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska and a Native inhabitant of Russia, Canada, or Greenland, including rendering of raw marine mammal parts as part of such exchange into clothing or handicrafts through carving, painting, sewing, or decorating.".

(h) ACTIONS AFFECTING SECTION 101(b).—Section 101(b) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "In promulgating any regulation or making any assessment pursuant to a hearing or proceeding under this subsection or section 117(b)(2), or fn making any determination or finding under this Act that affects stocks or persons to which this subsection applies, the Secretary shall be responsible for demonstrating that such regulation, assessment, determination, or finding is supported by substantial evidence on the basis of the record as a whole. The preceding sentence shall only be applicable in an action brought by one or more Alaska Native organizations representing persons to which this subsection applies.".

(i) TAKING IN DEFENSE OF SELF OR ANOTHER PERSON.—Section 101(c) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) It shall not be a violation of this Act to take a marine mammal if—

"(1) such taking is imminently necessary in self-defense or to save the life of a person in immediate danger; and

"(2) such taking is reported to the Secretary within 48 hours and, whenever feasible, any carcass is made available to the Secretary intact.".

SEC. 5. PERMITS.

Section 104 of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1374) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by inserting ", harassment," immediately after "taking"; and

(B) by inserting "except for the incidental taking of marine mammals during the course of commercial fishing operations" immediately before the period at the end; and (2) by amending subsection (c)(3) to read as follows:

"(3)(A) A permit may be issued, for scientific research purposes that are likely to result in the taking or harassment of a marine mammal, to an applicant who submits information with the permit application indicating that the taking or harassment is required to further a bona fide scientific purpose. The Secretary is authorized to issue permits under this paragraph prior to the end of the mandatory public review and comment period if delaying the issuance of such permit could result in harm to a species, stock, or individual marine mammal, or result in loss of unique research opportunities.

"(B) No permit issued for purposes of scientific research under subparagraph (A) shall authorize the lethal taking of a marine mammal unless the applicant submits documentation to the Secretary that a nonlethal method of conducting the research is not feasible. The Secretary shall not issue a permit for research which involves the lethal taking of a marine mammal from a species or stock designated as depleted, unless the Secretary determines that the results of such research will directly benefit that species or stock, or that such research fulfills a critically important research need.

"(C) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of the Marine Mammal Protection Act Amendments of 1994, the Secretary shall grant a general authorization and shall issue implementing regulations allowing bona fide scientific research that is not likely to result in the taking or harassment of a marine mammal. Such authorization shall apply to persons who submit, at least 60 days prior to commencement of the research, a letter of intent to the Secretary specifying—

"(i) the species or stock of marine mammal on which the research will be conducted;

"(ii) the geographic location of the research;

"(iii) the period of time over which the research will be conducted;

"(iv) the purpose of the research, including a description of how the definition of bona fide research as established by the Secretary under this Act would apply; and

"(v) the methods used to conduct the research.

Not later than 30 days after receipt of a letter of intent to conduct scientific research under the general authorization, the Secretary may notify the applicant that the proposed research is likely to result in the taking or harassment of a marine mammal, and that the provisions of subparagraph (A) apply. If no such notification is received, the proposed research shall be covered under the general authorization.".

SEC. 6. CONSERVATION PLANS.

Section 115(b) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1383(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) If the Secretary determines that an incidental take reduction plan is necessary to reduce the incidental taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations from a stock specified under section 117(a)(7), or for stocks which interact with a commercial fishery for which the Secretary has made a determination under section 118(b)(1), any conservation plan prepared under this subsection for such stock shall incorporate the incidental take reduction plan required under section 118 for such stock.".

SEC. 7. STOCK ASSESSMENTS.

(a) In General.—Title I of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 117. STOCK ASSESSMENTS.

"(a) In General.— Not later than August 1, 1994, the Secretary shall, after consultation with the appropriate regional scientific working group established under subsection (d), prepare a draft stock assessment for each marine mammal stock which occurs in waters under the jurisdiction of the United States. Each draft stock assessment, based on the best scientific information available, shall—

"(1) describe the geographic range of the affected stock, including any seasonal or temporal variation in such range;

"(2) provide for such stock the minimum population estimate, current and maximum net productivity rates, and current population trend, including a description of the information upon which these are based;

"(3) estimate the annual anthropogenic mortality and serious injury of the stock and, for a stock specified under paragraph (7), other factors that may be causing a decline or impeding recovery of the stock, including effects on marine mammal habitat and prey;

"(4) describe commercial fisheries that interact with the stock, including—

"(A) the approximate number of vessels actively participating in each such fishery;

"(B) the estimated level of incidental mortality and serious injury of the stock by each such fishery on an annual basis;

"(C) seasonal or area differences in such incidental mortality or serious injury; and

"(D) the rate, based on a unit of fishing effort, of such incidental mortality and serious injury, and an analysis stating whether such level is insignificant and is approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate;

"(5) categorize the status of the stock as one that either—

"(A) has a level of anthropogenic mortality and serious injury that is not likely to cause the stock to be reduced below its optimum sustainable population; or

"(B)(i) meets the criteria described under paragraph (7);

"(ii) is listed as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.), or designated as depleted under this Act; or

"(iii) meets the criteria specified in both clause (i) and (ii);

"(6) estimate the calculated removal level for the stock, describing the information used to calculate it, including the recovery factor; and

"(7) specify whether the Secretary has reason to believe that the level of anthropogenic mortality and serious injury for the stock is such that it may cause the stock to be reduced or maintained below its optimum sustainable population.

"(b) Public Comment.—(1) The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of the availability of a draft stock assessment or any revision thereof and provide an opportunity for public review and comment during a period of 90 days. Such notice shall include a summary of the assessment and a list of the sources of information or published reports upon which the assessment is based.

"(2) Subsequent to the notice of availability required under paragraph (1), if requested by a person to which section 101(b) applies, the Secretary shall conduct a proceeding on the record prior to publishing a final stock assessment or any revision thereof for any stock subject to taking under section 101(b).

"(3) After consideration of the best scientific information available, the advice of the appropriate regional scientific review group established under section (d), and the comments of the general public, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of availability and a summary of the final stock assessment or any revision thereof, not later than 90 days after—

"(A) the close of the public comment period on a draft stock assessment or revision thereof; or

"(B) final action on an agency proceeding pursuant to paragraph (2).

"(c) Review and Revision.—(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the appropriate regional scientific review group established under subsection (d), shall review stock assessments under this section—

"(A) annually for stocks specified under subsection (a)(7) or for which substantial new information is available; and

"(B) at least once every 3 years for all other marine mammal stocks.

"(2) If the review under paragraph (1) indicates that the status of the stock has changed or can be more accurately determined, the Secretary shall revise the stock assessment in accordance with subsection (b).

"(d) Regional Scientific Review Groups.—(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Commerce shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Interior (with respect to marine mammals under that Secretary's jurisdiction), the Governors of affected adjacent coastal States, regional fishery and wildlife management authorities, Alaska Native organizations and Indian tribes, environmental and fishery groups, establish at least two independent regional scientific review groups consisting of individuals with expertise in marine mammal biology and ecology, population dynamics and modeling, commercial fishing technology and practices, and stocks taken under section 101(b). The Secretary of Commerce shall, to the maximum extent practicable, attempt to achieve a balanced representation of viewpoints among the individuals on each regional scientific working group. The regional scientific review group shall advise the Secretary on all aspects of the stock assessments required under this section.

"(2) The regional scientific review groups established under this section shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 App. U.S.C.).

"(3) Members of the regional scientific review groups shall serve without compensation, but may be reimbursed by the Secretary, upon requests, for reasonable travel costs and expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of such regional scientific review groups.

"(4) The Secretary may appoint or reappoint individuals to the regional scientific working groups under paragraph (1) as needed.

"(e) Effect on Section 101(b).—This section shall not affect or otherwise modify the provisions of section 101(b).".

SEC. 8. TAKING OF MARINE MAMMALS INCIDENTAL TO COMMERCIAL FISHING OPERATIONS.

Title I of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1371 et seq.), as amended by this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 118. TAKING OF MARINE MAMMALS INCIDENTAL TO COMMERCIAL FISHING OPERATIONS.

"(a) In General.—(1) Effective on the date of enactment of this section, and except as provided in section 114 and in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this section, the provisions of this section shall govern the incidental taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations by persons using vessels of the United States or vessels which have valid fishing permits issued by the Secretary in accordance with section 204(b) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1824(b)). In any event it shall be the immediate goal that the incidental mortality or serious injury of marine mammals occurring in the course of commercial fishing operations be reduced to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate.

"(2) In the case of the incidental taking of marine mammals from species or stocks designated under this Act as depleted on the basis of their listing as threatened or endangered species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.), both this section and section 101(a)(5)(E) of this Act shall apply.

"(3) Sections 104(h) and title III, and not this section, shall govern the taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial purse seine fishing for yellowfin tuna in the eastern tropical Pacific Ocean.

"(4) This section shall not govern the taking of marine mammals from the California population of sea otters to which the Act of November 7, 1986 (Public Law 99–625; 100 Stat. 3500) applies.

"(5) Sections 103 and 104 shall not apply to the incidental taking of marine mammals under the authority of this section.

"(6) Except as provided in section 101(c)(2), the intentional killing of any marine mammal in the course of commercial fishing operations is prohibited.

"(b) Incidental Take Reduction Plans.—(1) The Secretary shall develop and implement an incidental take reduction plan designed to assist in the recovery of each marine mammal stock that is specified under section 117(a)(7) which interacts with a commercial fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A) (i) or (ii), and may develop and implement such a plan for any other marine mammal stocks which interact with a commercial fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A)(i) which the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for public comment, has an excessive rate of mortality and serious injury across a number of such marine mammal stocks.

"(2) If there is insufficient funding available to develop and implement an incidental take reduction plan for all such stocks that interact with commercial fisheries listed under subsection (f)(1)(A) (i) or (ii), the Secretary shall give highest priority to the development and implementation of incidental take reduction plans for species or stocks whose level of incidental mortality and serious injury exceeds the calculated removal level, those that have a small population size, and those which are declining most rapidly.

"(3) Each incidental take reduction plan developed under this subsection for a stock shall include the following:

"(A) A review and evaluation of the information contained in the stock assessment published under section 117 and any substantial new information that may be available.

"(B) An evaluation and estimate of the total number and percentage of animals from the stock that are being killed or seriously injured each year as a result of commercial fishing activities.

"(C) Proposed management measures and voluntary actions for the reduction of incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in commercial fisheries which interact with such stock.

"(D) A long-term strategy to reduce, to insignificant levels approaching a zero rate within 10 years, the incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals from the stock in the course of commercial fishing operations.

"(4)(A) Each incidental take reduction plan shall include projected dates for achieving the objectives of the plan.

"(B) For any stock in which incidental mortality and serious injury from commercial fisheries exceeds the calculated removal level established under section 117, the plan shall include measures the Secretary expects will reduce, within 6 months after commencement of operations by commercial fisheries that interact with that stock, such mortality and serious injury to a level below the calculated removal level.

"(C) For any stock in which anthropogenic mortality and serious injury exceeds the calculated removal level, other than a stock to which subparagraph (B) applies, the plan shall include measures the Secretary expects will reduce, to the maximum extent practicable within 6 months after commencement of operations by commercial fisheries that interact with that stock, the incidental mortality and serious injury by such commercial fisheries from that stock. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'maximum extent practicable' means to the lowest level that is feasible for such fisheries within the 6-month period.

"(5)(A) At the earliest possible time (not later than 60 days) after the Secretary issues a final stock assessment for a stock specified under section 117(a)(7), the Secretary shall, and for stocks that interact with a fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A)(i) for which the Secretary has made a determination under paragraph (1), the Secretary may—

"(i) establish an incidental take reduction team for such stock and appoint the members of such team in accordance with subparagraph (C); and

"(ii) publish in the Federal Register a notice of the team's establishment, the names of the team's appointed members, the full geographic range of such stock, and a list of all commercial fisheries that cause incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals from such stock.

"(B) The Secretary may charge an incidental take reduction team to address a stock that extends over one or more regions or fisheries, or multiple stocks within a region or fishery, if the Secretary determines that doing so would facilitate the development and implementation of plans required under this subsection.

"(C) Members of incidental take reduction teams shall be individuals knowledgeable and experienced regarding measures to conserve such stocks and to reduce incidental mortality and serious injury to such stock from commercial fishing operations. Members may include representatives of Federal and State agencies, Councils, interstate fishery commissions, academic and scientific organizations, environmental and fishery groups, Alaska Native organizations and Indian tribes, and others as the Secretary considers appropriate. Incidental take reduction teams shall include a representative of each affected Council and State, and shall, to the maximum extent practicable, include an equitable balance among representatives of government, resource user interests, and public interest groups. Incidental take reduction teams shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 App. U.S.C.) but their meetings shall be open to the public, after timely notice of the time and place of such meetings.

"(D) Members of incidental take reduction teams shall serve without compensation, but may be reimbursed by the Secretary, upon request, for reasonable travel costs and expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of the team.

"(6) Where the anthropogenic mortality and serious injury from a stock specified under section 117(a)(7) is estimated to be equal to or greater than the calculated removal level established under section 117 for such stock and such stock interacts with a fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A) (i) or (ii), the following procedures shall apply in the development of the incidental take reduction plan for the stock:

"(A)(i) Not later than 6 months after the date of establishment of an incidental take reduction team for the stock, the team shall submit a draft incidental take reduction plan for such stock to the Secretary, consistent with the other provisions of this section.

"(ii) Such draft incidental take reduction plan shall be developed by consensus. In the event consensus cannot be reached, the team shall advise the Secretary in writing on the range of possibilities considered by the team, and the views of both the majority and minority.

"(B)(i) The Secretary shall take the draft incidental take reduction plan into consideration and, not later than 60 days after the submission of the draft plan by the team, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the plan proposed by the team, and changes proposed by the Secretary with an explanation of the reasons therefor, and proposed regulations to implement such plan, for public review and comment during a period of not to exceed 90 days.

"(ii) In the event that the incidental take reduction team does not submit a draft plan to the Secretary within 6 months, the Secretary shall, not later than 8 months after the establishment of the team, publish in the Federal Register a proposed incidental take reduction plan and implementing regulations, for public review and comment during a period of not to exceed 90 days.

"(C) Not later than 90 days after the close of the comment period required under subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall issue a final incidental take reduction plan and implementing regulations, consistent with the other provisions of this section.

"(D) The Secretary and the incidental take reduction team shall meet every 6 months, or a such other intervals as the Secretary determines are necessary, to monitor the implementation of the final incidental take reduction plan until such time that the Secretary determines that the objectives of such plan have been met.

"(E) The Secretary shall amend the incidental take reduction plan and implementing regulations as necessary to meet the requirements of this section, in accordance with the procedures in this section for the issuance of such plans and regulations.

"(7) Where the anthropogenic mortality and serious injury from a stock specified under section 117(a)(7) is estimated to be less than the calculated removal level established under section 117 for such stock and such stock interacts with a fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A) (i) or (ii), or for any marine mammal stocks which interact with a commercial fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A) (i) for which the Secretary has made a determination under paragraph (1), the following procedures shall apply in the development of the incidental take reduction plan for such stock:

"(A)(i) Not later than 11 months after the date of establishment of an incidental take reduction team for the stock, the team shall submit a draft incidental take reduction plan for the stock to the Secretary, consistent with the other provisions of this section.

"(ii) Such draft incidental take reduction plan shall be developed by consensus. In the event consensus cannot be reached, the team shall advise the Secretary in writing on the range of possibilities considered by the team, and the views of both the majority and minority.

"(B)(i) The Secretary shall take the draft incidental tax reduction plan into consideration and, not later than 60 days after the submission of the draft plan by the team, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the plan proposed by the team, and changes proposed by the Secretary with an explanation of the reasons therefor, and proposed regulations to implement such plan, for public review and comment during a period of not to exceed 90 days.

"(ii) In the event that the incidental take reduction team does not submit a draft plan to the Secretary within 11 months, the Secretary shall, not later than 13 months after the establishment of the team, publish in the Federal Register a proposed incidental take reduction plan and implementing regulations, for public review and comment during a period of not to exceed 90 days.

"(C) Not later than 90 days after the close of the comment period required under subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall issue a final incidental take reduction plan and implementing regulations, consistent with the other provisions of this section.

"(D) The Secretary and the incidental take reduction team shall meet on an annual basis, or at such other intervals as the Secretary determines are necessary, to monitor the implementation of the final incidental take reduction plan until such time that the Secretary determines that the objectives of such plan have been met.

"(E) The Secretary shall amend the incidental take reduction plan and implementing regulations as necessary to meet the requirements of this section, in accordance with the procedures in this section for the issuance of such plans and regulations.

"(8) In implementing an incidental take reduction plan developed pursuant to this subsection, the Secretary may, where necessary to implement an incidental take reduction plan to protect or restore a marine mammal stock or species covered by such plan, promulgate regulations which include, but are not limited to, measures to—

"(A) establish fishery-specific limits on incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in commercial fisheries or restrict commercial fisheries by time or area;

"(B) require the use of alternative commercial fishing gear or techniques and new technologies, encourage the development of such gear or technology, or convene expert skippers' panels;

"(C) educate commercial fishermen, through workshops and other means, on the importance of reducing the incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in affected commercial fisheries; and

"(D) monitor the effectiveness of measures taken to reduce the level of incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations, as set forth in subsection (d).

"(9)(A) Notwithstanding paragraph (5), in the case of any stock to which paragraph (5) applies for which a final stock assessment has not been published under section 117(b)(3) by April 1, 1995, due to a proceeding under section 117(b)(2), or any Federal court review of such proceeding, the Secretary shall establish an incidental take reduction team under paragraph (5) for such stock as if a final stock assessment had been published.

"(B) The draft stock assessment published for stock under section 117(b)(1) shall be deemed the final stock assessment for purposes of preparing and implementing an incidental take reduction plan for such stock under this section.

"(C) Upon publication of a final stock assessment for such stock under section 117(b)(3) the Secretary shall immediately reconvene the incidental take reduction team for such stock for the purpose of amending the incidental take reduction plan, and any regulations issued to implement such plan, if necessary, to reflect the final stock assessment or court action. Such amendments shall be made in accordance with paragraph (6)(E) or (7)(E), as appropriate.

"(D) A draft stock assessment may only be used as the basis for an incidental take reduction plan under this paragraph for a period of not to exceed two years, or until a final stock assessment is published, whichever is earlier. If, at the end of the two-year period, a final stock assessment has not been published, the Secretary shall categorize such stock under section 117(a)(5)(A) and shall revoke any regulations to implement an incidental take reduction plan for such stock.

"(E) Subparagraph (D) shall not apply for any period beyond two years during which a final stock assessment for such stock has not been published due to review of a proceeding on such stock assessment by a Federal court. Immediately upon final action by such court, the Secretary shall proceed under subparagraph (C).

"(10) Incidental take reduction plans developed under this section for a species or stock listed as a threatened or endangered species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.) shall be consistent with any recovery plan developed for such species or stock under section 4 of such Act.

"(c) EMERGENCY REGULATIONS.—(1) If the Secretary finds that incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals from commercial fisheries is having, or is likely to have, an immediate and significant adverse impact on a stock or species, the Secretary shall take action as follows:

"(A) In the case of a stock or species for which an approved incidental take reduction plan is in effect, the Secretary shall—

"(i) prescribe emergency regulations that, consistent with such plan to the maximum extent practicable, reduce such incidental mortality and serious injury in that fishery; and

"(ii) approve and implement, on an expedited basis, any amendments to such plan that are recommended by the incidental take reduction team to address such adverse impact.

"(B) In the case of a stock or species for which an incidental take reduction plan is being developed, the Secretary shall—

"(i) prescribe emergency regulations to reduce such incidental mortality and serious injury in that fishery; and

"(ii) approve and implement, on an expedited basis, such plan, which shall provide methods to address such adverse impact if still necessary.

"(C) In the case of a stock or species for which an incidental take reduction plan does not exist and is not being developed, or in the case of a commercial fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A)(iii) which the Secretary believes may be contributing to such adverse impact, the Secretary shall—

"(i) prescribe emergency regulations to reduce such incidental mortality and serious injury in that fishery, to the extent necessary to mitigate such adverse impact;

"(ii) immediately review the stock assessment for such stock or species under section 117 and the classification of such commercial fishery under subsection (f)(1)(A) to determine if an incidental take reduction team should be established under this section; and

"(iii) may, where necessary to address such adverse impact, require the placement of observers pursuant to subsection (d) upon vessels in a commercial fishery listed under subsection (f)(1)(A)(iii), if the Secretary has reason to believe that such vessels may be causing incidental mortality and serious injury to marine mammals for such stock.

"(2) Prior to taking action under paragraph (1) (A), (B), or (C), the Secretary shall consult with the Marine Mammal Commission, all appropriate Councils, State fishery managers, and the appropriate incidental take reduction team (if established).

"(3) Emergency regulations prescribed under this subsection—

"(A) shall be published in the Federal Register, together with an explanation thereof;

"(B) shall remain in effect for not more than 180 days, or until the end of the applicable commercial fishing season, whichever is earlier; and

"(C) may be terminated by the Secretary at an earlier date by publication in the Federal Register of a notice of termination, if the Secretary determines that the reasons for the emergency regulations no longer exist.

"(4) If the Secretary finds that incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in a commercial fishery is continuing to have an immediate and significant adverse impact on a stock or species, the Secretary may extend the emergency regulations for an additional period of not more than 90 days or until reasons for the emergency no longer exist, whichever is earlier.

"(d) MONITORING OF INCIDENTAL TAKES.—(1) The Secretary shall establish a program to monitor incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals during the course of commercial fishing operations for commercial fisheries listed under subsection (f)(1)(A) (i) or (ii). The purposes of the monitoring program shall be to—

"(A) obtain statistically reliable estimates of incidental mortality and serious injury;

"(B) determine the reliability of reports of incidental mortality and serious injury under subsection (g); and

"(C) report on the impacts of changes in commercial fishing methods or technology.

"(2) Pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary is authorized to place observers on board vessels as necessary, subject to the provisions of this section. Observers may perform other tasks including, but not limited to—

"(A) recording other sources of mortality;

"(B) recording the number of marine mammals sighted and the behavior of such mammals observed in the vicinity of commercial fishing gear;

"(C) Other related scientific or fishery management observations; and

"(D) Collection of marine mammals tissues, where such collection can be done safely and without interruption of commercial fishing operations.

"(3) When determining the distribution of observers among fisheries and vessels within a fishery, the Secretary shall be guided by the following standards;

"(A) the need to obtain the best scientific information available;

"(B) the requirement that assignment of observers be fair and equitable among fisheries and among vessels in a fishery;

"(C) the requirement that no individual person or vessel, or group of persons or vessels, be subject to excessive or overly burdensome observer coverage; and

"(D) where practicable, the need to minimize costs and avoid duplication.

"(4) To the extent practicable, the Secretary shall allocate observers among commercial fisheries in accordance with the following priority:

"(A) The highest priority for allocation shall be for commercial fisheries that have incidental mortality or serious injury of marine mammals from stocks designated as depleted on the basis of their listing as endangered or threatened species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.).

"(B) The second highest priority for allocation shall be for commercial fisheries that have incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals from stocks specified under section 117(a)(7).

"(C) The third highest priority for allocation shall be for commercial fisheries that have incidental mortality or serious injury of marine mammals from stocks for which the level of incidental mortality and serious injury is uncertain.

"(5) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the Secretary may establish an alternative observer program to provide statistically reliable information on the species and number of any marine mammals incidentally taken in the course of commercial fishing operations. The alternative program may include, but need not be limited to, direct observation of fishing activities from vessels, airplanes, or points on shore.

"(6) The Secretary may, with the consent of the vessel owner, station an observer on board a vessel engaged in a commercial fishery not listed under subsection (f)(1)(A) (i) or (ii).

"(7) The Secretary shall not be required to place an observer on a vessel in a commercial fishery if the Secretary finds that—

"(A) in a situation where harvesting vessels are delivering fish to a processing vessel and the catch is not taken on board the harvesting vessel, statistically reliable information can be obtained from an observer on board the processing vessel to which the fish are delivered;

‘‘(B) the facilities of a vessel for quartering of an observer, or for carrying out observer functions, are so inadequate or unsafe that the health or safety of the observer or the safe operation of the vessel would be jeopardized; or

‘‘(C) for reasons beyond the control of the Secretary, an observer is not available.

‘‘(8) Any proprietary information collected under this subsection shall be confidential and shall not be disclosed except—

‘‘(A) to Federal employees whose duties require access to such information;

‘‘(B) to State or tribal employees pursuant to an agreement with the Secretary that prevents public disclosure of the identity or business of any person;

‘‘(C) when required by court order; or

‘‘(D) in the case of scientific information involving fisheries, to employees of Councils who are responsible for fishery management plan development and monitoring.

‘‘(9) The Secretary shall prescribe such procedures as may be necessary to preserve the confidentiality of proprietary information collected under this subsection, except that the Secretary shall release or make public upon request any such information in aggregate, summary, or other form which does not directly or indirectly disclose the identity or business of any person.

‘‘(e) ZERO MORTALITY RATE GOAL.—(1) Commercial fisheries shall reduce incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate within 10 years after the date of enactment of this section.

‘‘(2) Fisheries which maintain insignificant serious injury and mortality levels approaching a zero rate shall not be required to further reduce their mortality rates.

‘‘(3) Three years after such date of enactment, the Secretary shall review the progress of all commercial fisheries, by fishery, toward reducing incidental mortality and serious injury to insignificant levels approaching a zero rate. The Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives a report setting forth the results of such review within 1 year after commencement of the review. The Secretary shall note any commercial fishery for which inadequate information exists on the level of incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in the fishery.

‘‘(4) If the Secretary determines after review under paragraph (3) that the rate of incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in a commercial fishery is not consistent with paragraph (1), then the Secretary shall take appropriate action under subsection (b), and shall make recommendations to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives on any legislative changes needed to achieve the goal specified in paragraph (1).

‘‘(f) REGISTRATION AND AUTHORIZATION.—(1) The Secretary shall, within 90 days after the date of enactment of this section—

‘‘(A) publish in the Federal Register for public comment, for a period of not less than 90 days, any necessary changes to the Secretary's list of commercial fisheries published under section 114 (along with an explanation of such changes and a statement of the marine mammals and the approximate number of vessels or persons actively involved in each such fishery) that have—

‘‘(i) frequent incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals;

‘‘(ii) occasional incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals; or

‘‘(iii) a remote likelihood of or no known incidental mortality or serious injury of marine mammals;

‘‘(B) after the close of the period for such public comment, publish in the Federal Register a revised list of commercial fisheries and an update of information required by subparagraph (A), together with a summary of the provisions of this section and information sufficient to advise vessel owners on how to obtain an authorization and otherwise comply with the requirements of this section; and

‘‘(C) at least once each year thereafter, and at such other times as the Secretary considers appropriate, reexamine, based on information gathered under this Act and other relevant sources and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the classification of commercial fisheries and other determinations required under subparagraph (A) and publish in the Federal Register any necessary changes.

‘‘(2)(A) An authorization shall be granted by the Secretary in accordance with this section for a vessel engaged in a commercial fishery listed under paragraph (1)(A) (i) or (ii), upon receipt by the Secretary of a completed registration form providing the name of the vessel owner and operator, the name and description of the vessel, the fisheries in which it will be engaged, the approximate time, duration, and location of such fishery operations, and the general type and nature of use of the fishing gear and techniques used. Such information shall be in a readily usable format that can be efficiently entered into and utilized by an automated or computerized data processing system. A decal or other physical evidence that the authorization is current and valid shall be issued by the Secretary at the time an authorization is granted, and so long as the authorization remains current and valid, shall be reissued annually thereafter.

‘‘(B) No authorization may be granted under this section to the owner of a vessel unless such vessel—

‘‘(i) is a vessel of the United States; or

‘‘(ii) has a valid fishing permit issued by the Secretary in accordance with section 204(b) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1824(b)).

‘‘(C) Except as provided in subsection (a), an authorization granted under this section shall allow the incidental taking of all species and stocks of marine mammals to which this Act applies.

‘‘(3)(A) An owner of a vessel engaged in any fishery listed under paragraph (1)(A) (i) or (ii) shall, in order to engage in the lawful incidental taking of marine mammals in a commercial fishery—

‘‘(i) have registered as required under paragraph (2) with the Secretary in order to obtain for each such vessel owned an authorization for the purpose of incidentally taking marine mammals in accordance with this section, except that owners of vessels holding valid certificates of exemption under section 114 are deemed to have registered for purposes of this subsection for the period during which such registration is valid;

‘‘(ii) ensure that a decal or such other physical evidence of a current and valid authorization as the Secretary may require is displayed on or is in the possession of the master of each such vessel; and

‘‘(iii) report as required by subsection (g).

‘‘(B) Any owner of a vessel receiving an authorization under this section for any fishery listed under paragraph (1)(A) (i) or (ii) shall, as a condition of that authorization, take on board an observer if requested to do so by the Secretary.

‘‘(C) An owner of a vessel engaged in a fishery listed under paragraph (1)(A) (i) or (ii) who—

‘‘(i) fails to obtain from the Secretary an authorization for such vessel under this section;

‘‘(ii) fails to maintain a current and valid authorization for such vessel; or

‘‘(iii) fails to ensure that a decal or other physical evidence of such authorization issued by the Secretary is displayed on or is in possession of the master of the vessel,

and the master of any such vessel engaged in such fishery, shall be deemed to have violated this title. Such owner and master shall be subject to penalty under sections 105 and 107 for a violation of clause (i) or (ii), and shall be subject to a fine of not more than $100 for each offense for a violation of clause (iii).

‘‘(D) If the owner of a vessel has obtained and maintains a current and valid authorization from the Secretary under this section and meets the requirements set forth in this section, including compliance with any regulations to implement an incidental take reduction plan under this section, the owner of such vessel, and the master and crew members of the vessel, shall not be subject to the penalties set forth in this title for the incidental taking of marine mammals while such vessel is engaged in a fishery to which the authorization applies.

‘‘(E) Each owner of a vessel engaged in any fishery not listed under paragraph (1)(A) (i) or (ii), and the master and crew members of such a vessel, shall not be subject to the penalties set forth in this title for the incidental taking of marine mammals if such owner reports to the Secretary, in the form and manner required under subsection (g), instances of incidental mortality or injury of marine mammals in the course of that fishery.

‘‘(4) The Secretary shall suspend or revoke an authorization granted under this section and shall not issue a decal or other physical evidence of the authorization for any vessel until the owner of such vessel complies with the reporting requirements under subsection (g) and such requirements to take on board an observer under paragraph (3)(B) as are applicable to such vessel. Previous failure to comply with the requirements of section 114 shall not bar the grant of an authorization under this section for an owner who complies with the requirements of this section. The Secretary may suspend or revoke an authorization granted under this subsection, and may not issue a decal or other physical evidence of the authorization for any vessel which fails to comply with regulations implementing an incidental take reduction plan or emergency regulations issued under this section.

‘‘(5)(A) The Secretary shall develop, in consultation with the appropriate States, affected Councils, and other interested persons, the means by which the granting and administration of authorizations under this section shall be integrated and coordinated, to the maximum extent practicable, with existing fishery licenses, registrations, and related programs.

‘‘(B) The Secretary shall utilize newspapers of general circulation, fishery trade associations, electronic media, and other means of advising commercial fishermen of the provisions of this section and the means by which they can comply with its requirements.

"(C) The Secretary is authorized to charge a fee for the granting of an authorization under this section. The level of fees charged under this subparagraph shall not exceed the administrative costs incurred in granting an authorization. Fees collected under this subparagraph shall be available to the Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere for expenses incurred in the granting and administration of authorizations under this section.

"(g) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—The owner or operator of a commercial fishing vessel subject to this Act shall report all incidental mortality and injury of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations to the Secretary by mail or other means acceptable to the Secretary within 48 hours after the end of each fishing trip on a standard postage-paid form to be developed by the Secretary under this section. Such form shall be capable of being readily entered into and usable by an automated or computerized data processing system and shall require the vessel owner or operator to provide the following:

"(1) The vessel name, and Federal, State, or tribal registration numbers of the registered vessel.

"(2) The name and address of the vessel owner or operator.

"(3) The name and description of the fishery.

"(4) the species of each marine mammal incidentally killed or injured, and the date, time, and approximate geographic location of such occurrence.

"(h) PENALTIES.—Except as provided in subsection (f), any person who violates this section shall be subject to the provisions of sections 105 and 107, and may be subject to section 106 as the Secretary establishes by regulations.

"(i) VOLUNTARY MEASURES.—Noting in this section shall be construed to limit the Secretary's authority to permit voluntary measures to be utilized in reducing the incidental taking of marine mammals in commercial fisheries.

"(j) CONSULTATION WITH SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of the Interior on measures promulgated under this section with affect species or stocks under such Secretary's jurisdiction.".

"(b) Application.—Any person may apply to the Secretary to authorize the lethal removal of pinnipeds identified as habitually exhibiting dangerous or damaging behavior that cannot otherwise be deterred. Any such application shall include a means of identifying the individual pinniped or pinnipeds, and shall include a detailed description of the problem interaction and expected benefits of the removal.

"(c) Actions in Response to Application.—(1) Within 15 days of receiving an application, the Secretary shall determine whether the application has produced sufficient evidence to warrant establishing a Pinniped-Fishery Interaction Task Force to address the situation described in the application. If the Secretary determines that such sufficient evidence has been provided, the Secretary shall establish a Pinniped-Fishery Interaction Task Force and publish a notice in the Federal Register requesting public comment on the application.

"(2) A Pinniped-Federal Interaction Task Force established under paragraph (1) shall consist of designated employees of the Department of Commerce, scientists who are knowledgeable about the pinniped interaction that the application addresses, representatives of affected conservation and fishing community organizations, Indian Treaty tribes, the States, and such other organizations as the Secretary deems appropriate.

"(3) Within 60 days after establishment, and after reviewing public comments in response to the Federal Register notice, the Pinniped-Fishery Interaction Task Force shall—

"(A) recommend to the Secretary whether to approve or deny the proposed lethal removal of the pinniped or pinnipeds, including along with the recommendation a description of the specific pinniped individual or individuals, the proposed location, time, and method of removal, criteria for evaluating the success of the action, and the duration of the authority; and

"(5) After implementation of an approved application, the Pinniped-Fishery Interaction Task Force shall evaluate the effectiveness of the permitted lethal removal or alternative actions implemented. If implementation was ineffective in eliminating the problem interaction, the Task Force shall recommend additional actions. If the implementation was effective, the Task Force shall so advise the Secretary, and the Secretary shall disband the Task Force.

"(d) Considerations.—In considering whether an application should be approved or denied, the Task Force and the Secretary shall consider—

"(1) population trends, feeding habits, the location of the pinniped interaction, how and when the interaction occurs, and how many individuals pinnipeds are involved;

"(2) past efforts to nonlethally deter such pinnipeds, and whether the applicant has demonstrated that no feasible and prudent alternatives exist and that the applicant has taken all reasonable nonlethal steps without success;

"(3) the extent to which such pinnipeds are causing undue harm, impact, or imbalance with other species in the ecosystem, including fish populations; and

"(4) the extent to which such pinnipeds are exhibiting behavior that presents an ongoing threat to public safety.

"(e) Limitation.—The Secretary shall not approve lethal removal for any pinniped from a species or stock that is—

"(1) listed as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act of 1973;

"(2) designated as depleted under this Act; or

"(3) specified under section 117(a)(7) of this Act.

"(f) Regionwide Pinniped-Fishery Interaction Study.—(1)(A) The Secretary shall conduct a study, of not less than three high predation areas in anadromous fish migration corridors within the Northwest Region of the National Marine Fisheries Service, on the interaction between fish and pinnipeds. In carrying out the study, the Secretary shall consult with other State and Federal agencies with expertise in pinniped-fishery interaction. The study shall evaluate—

"(i) fish behavior in the presence of predators generally;

"(ii) holding times and passage rates of anadromous fish stocks in areas where such aradromous fish are vulnerable to predation;

"(iii) whether additional facilities exist, or could be reasonably developed, that could improve escapement for anadromous fish; and

"(iv) other issues the Secretary considers relevant.

"(B) Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Secretary shall, not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this section, transmit a report on the results of the study required by this paragraph to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives.

"(C) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $700,000 for the purpose of carrying out the study required by this paragraph.

"(2) The study conducted under this subsection shall not be considered relevant in any determination under subsection (c), nor reviewed by any Task Force in connection with considerations under subsection (d), until such study is completed, and may not be used by the Secretary as a reason for delaying or deferring a determination under subsection (c).".

"(9) No marine mammal may be exported for the purpose of public display, scientific research, or enhancing the survival or recovery of a species or stock unless the receiving facility meets standards that are comparable to the requirements that a person must meet to receive a permit under this subsection for that purpose.

"(10) The Secretary shall establish and maintain an inventory of all marine mammals possessed pursuant to permits issued under paragraph (2) and all progeny of such marine mammals. The inventory shall contain, for each marine mammal, only the following information, which shall be provided by a person holding a marine mammal under this Act:

May we not see each other only in terms of power or influence, but also as brothers and sisters bound together in the walk through life. May we understand more clearly the gifts of kindness and devotion, of affection and appreciation, of admiration and esteem, of shared loyalties and commitment so that we portray the wonders and miracle of Your creation and the power of Your love. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

> H.R. 2139. An act to amend title 44, United States Code, to authorize appropriations for the National Historical Publications and Records Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 56) "Joint resolution to designate the week beginning April 12, as National Public Safety Telecommunications Week."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

> S. 1636. An act to authorize appropriations for the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 and to improve the program to reduce the incidental taking of marine mammals during the course of commercial fishing operations, and for other purposes.
> S.J. Res. 171. Joint resolution to designate March 20 through March 26, 1994, as "Small Family Farm Week."

IT IS TIME TO CHANGE THE TAX CODE

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, several years ago a man by the name of Alex Council of North Carolina, confronted by an IRS problem that exhausted all of his savings and money, committed suicide. He left this suicide note for his wife, Kay:

> Kay, I have taken my life in order to provide money for you and our family to fight the IRS that is out of control and has taken liens against our property illegally. I have made the only decision I can, Kay; the only decision I can, Congress, to commit suicide.

Shame, Congress, for allowing the tax law that most attorneys cannot read and understand, a tax law that most accountants cannot even agree upon, a tax law that treats taxpayers and makes them guilty and must prove themselves innocent. This is unbelievable.

Jeffrey Dahmer was innocent until proven guilty, but a taxpayer is guilty and must prove themselves innocent.

I think it is time to change that Tax Code and to, in fact, treat a taxpayer and let that taxpayer be innocent and let the IRS prove their case.

IT SOUNDS LIKE SOCIALISM

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, every day Americans learn more unintended negative consequences of the Clinton health plan. A current Lewin-VHI study on the President's health reform plan found it will kill at least 155,000 private-sector jobs with an estimated 88 percent of the cost of its heavy-handed employer mandate punishing workers through reduced wages.

We also learn from a multinational business services report that implementing Clinton's health plan will require 98,164 new Government employees to manage the 2,900 pages of new Government redtape.

The rest of the world is moving at lightning speed away from centralized economies and toward free markets. We now have more Government employees involved in redistributing wealth in our country than we have private-sector employees producing wealth. Still, President Clinton wants to substitute Government bureaucrats for private-sector workers. It has been done before. It is called socialism. It does not work.

MEMBERS MUST CLOSELY EXAMINE H.R. 6

(Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, the House is scheduled to continue the consideration of H.R. 6, a bill that was originally designed to reauthorize the elementary and secondary education programs. Since then, however, it has changed substantially with additional Federal mandates placed in it.

I am very skeptical of this bill, Mr. Speaker, because it mostly ignores the primary role of local teachers, administrators, school boards, and States in educational quality. This is one of those defining issues in which we determine whether you want more Federal bureaucracy in the operation of local programs or whether, in fact, you believe that local people have a better feel for what they want to do with their kids and their schools.

I am a strong believer in local control of education. It is the core of what is right with the system.

H.R. 6 flies in the face of that tradition: the opportunity-to-learn standards, which address conditions in schools, not results, which dictate what kinds of things you ought to do, not saying do it to come out with the results that are best for your region and your area; corrective-action provisions that will target local school district governments; over $1 billion in narrow, categorical programs and grants; numerous mandates for schools.

When you add it all up, you get one answer: too much Federal control. Once again, the Feds want 60 percent of control for 6 percent of the bucks. That is not a good deal for education in this country and our schools.

I urge my colleagues to closely examine H.R. 6.

THE TAX DOUBLE STANDARD

(Mr. EVERETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, tax day is fast approaching middle-class America. Yes; April 15 promises to be an unnatural disaster for many small businesses across the country.

Small business owners must look at the first family with a mixture of envy and anger. Envy at how they may have avoided paying many taxes over the years, and anger at their decision to sock it to the middle class.

According to their own admission, the Clintons may have underreported their tax liabilities in regards to the whole Whitewater affair.

The Clintons have said that any mistakes on their taxes were unintentional and inadvertent. I imagine the IRS is full of those who claim that its all just a big misunderstanding.

In any event, there is a double standard here. The White House loves taxes, just as long as they don't have to pay them.

MFN STATUS FOR CHINA?

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. speaker, we are ready to face the question of granting or not granting MFN to China.

Let me just express disappointment for the business community in Beijing—that is, the American business community—the way they treated Secretary Christopher.

I would have hoped they would have said to Secretary Christopher, "Although there may be differences in whether you grant MFN or not grant MFN, Mr. Secretary, we share your goal for human rights, and we stand with you." The business community did not do that.

I want to express concern.

I want my colleagues to see the latest report in the National Journal about China, and I want to read it to you:

[From the National Journal, Mar. 5, 1994]

NEW CHARGES ABOUT CHINA

The coming debate over China's most-favored-nation trading status could be complicated by new allegations of brutality in China's corrections system. Zhang Guei-Xing, a Hong Kong-based business executive and holder of an American green card, was recently released after spending 30 months in a detention center in the Chinese city of Zhengzhou in Henan Province. He charges that during his stay, 200 inmates were executed and that some body parts were sold to transplant clinics in Japan and Hong Kong. The allegations are being investigated by the American government.

Body parts, before they killed the men, they took their corneas and they took their kidneys for sale of the body parts.

Third, I want to urge my colleagues to read the book by Harry Wo, who spent 19 years in a forced slave labor camp in China. As I say, there can be good men, and there are good men and women on both sides of the issue, but there should be no difference on whether or not we want to be strong for standing up for human rights and religious freedom.

I want again to express my disappointment and urge the American business community in Beijing that it is OK to differ on our approach, but please stand firm and support the American policy of strong support with regard to human rights and religious freedom.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken at the end of legislative business today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, actually, H.R. 3235 is the working product of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Deposit Insurance of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, which subcommittee is chaired by the very able and most valued member of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. NEAL].

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in favor of H.R. 3235, the Money Laundering Suppression Act of 1994. I introduced this legislation last fall because its provisions both enhance the Government's ability to combat money laundering and reduce unnecessary reporting burdens on banks. The bill is based on 18 months of exhaustive study, careful analysis and thorough work on every detail.

A key provision of the bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to substantially reduce the number of currency transaction reports, known as CTRs, filed by depository institutions. The 10 million CTR's filed every year entail huge costs for filers and the Treasury Department, which must process the data. In addition, this mountain of reports actually has made it more difficult for law enforcement agencies to sort through the database during an investigation. The Secretary will accomplish this reduction by exempting banks from filing CTR's on customers whose transactions have little or no law enforcement value. IRS officials estimate that CTR filings could be reduced by 30 to 40 percent if these routine deposits and withdrawals were not included, thereby making the filing burden lower but law enforcement better.

The bill also addresses the problem of money laundering at so-called nonbank financial institutions. As banks have improved their compliance with currency reporting requirements, money-laundering activity has shifted to these businesses. It is difficult for the Government to monitor them because they do not receive the same attention from regulators that banks do. The bill requires nonbank money transmitters to register with the Treasury Department, and expresses the sense of the Congress that money transmitters should be licensed at the State level.

Finally, the bill addresses a recent Supreme Court decision that has made it much more difficult for the Government to convict persons of evading the currency reporting requirements. This ruling jeopardizes several hundred money-laundering cases currently pending in our judicial system. It is therefore urgent that Congress make clear its intent that the practice of structuring cash transactions to evade reporting requirements is not to be tolerated, which the bill does.

I urge adoption of the bill and thank Mr. NEAL for his contributions to it, as well as my Republican colleagues who cooperated in moving the legislation forward.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of our time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. NEAL] and ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to allocate the time under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. NEAL] for the balance of the time allotted.

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3235 is an important legislative step forward in fighting the crime of money laundering.

I am pleased to have cosponsored this legislation with the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee [Mr. GONZALEZ], who has played a leading role in addressing the threat that money laundering poses to financial institutions.

One of the unique aspects of this legislation is that it combats money laundering by seeking to eliminate 30 percent of the 10 million currency transaction reports now being filed annually. Elimination of these reports, which law enforcement officials inform us have no value, will also reduce the paperwork burden on financial institutions.

Eliminating these unnecessary reports will enhance law enforcement efforts. Reports on legitimate transactions are the chaff in which the kernels of illegitimate transactions hide. By eliminating those reports, it should be easier for law officials to identify those reports which have a high degree of usefulness in combating money laundering.

The Banking Committee added an important amendment to the legislation. The amendment, which is contained in section 11 of the bill, clarifies that the offense of structuring transactions to evade currency reporting requirements does not require the Government to prove that a defendant knew that structuring is illegal. This clarification was necessary because of a January Supreme Court decision, Ratzlaf versus United States, in which the Court held, by a 5 to 4 margin, that such a showing is necessary. Justice Blackmun, in his dissent, pointed out that "ignorance of the law * * * is no defense to criminal prosecution" and that Congress intended "that a willful violation of the antistructuring provisions requires knowledge of the bank's reporting requirements and an intent to evade them, [not] knowledge of the illegality of structuring." Section 11 makes it completely clear that structuring violations require only intent to evade the reporting requirements. Under the amendment, the Government will not have to prove that the defendant knew structuring was illegal. The Government will need only prove that the defendant structured transactions with the intent to evade the reporting requirements.

Several other provisions of the bill are also worth noting.

Sections 7 and 8 address the role of money transmitters and check cashers in money laundering. As financial institutions have become more efficient in filing currency transactions reports and detecting and reporting money-laundering schemes, money launderers have increasingly turned to nondepository institutions as a vehicle for money laundering.

Section 7 contains a sense of the Congress that the States should work together to develop uniform laws regulating money transmitters and check cashers, and should provide for adequate enforcement of those laws. As a consumer protection matter, the States are also urged to consider regulation of check cashing fees, to prevent abuse of low-income consumers who have little or no other sources of having checks cashed.

Section 8 provides that money transmitters must register with the Treasury. This will assure that the Treasury is aware of who is engaged in the business, so that it can better monitor their compliance with currency transaction reporting requirements. The legislation requires that the Secretary establish a minimum threshold below which registration is not required, so as to eliminate unnecessary burdens on small businesses. At the same time, large money transmitting businesses are required to make the lists of their agents available to law enforcement agencies upon request. This will enable law enforcement officials to check on the status of particular money transmitting agents if that becomes necessary.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important piece of legislation that is supported by both the law enforcement and the financial institutions communities. I commend the chairman of the Banking Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], for introducing it and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] for working to perfect it. I urge the House to pass it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3235.

The Money Laundering Suppression Act of 1994, crafted under the leadership of Chairman NEAL, Chairman GONZALEZ, and the ranking member of the Financial Institutions Subcommittee, BILL MCCOLLUM, strikes an appropriate balance between reducing the regulatory burden on our financial institutions and improving detection of money laundering.

The Treasury Department has estimated that $110 billion is laundered through our financial system each year. Some think the number may be as high as $300 billion. Whatever the figure, it is an extraordinary problem, representing the lifeblood of the drug trade.

However, since enactment of the Bank Secrecy Act in 1970, which requires that a currency transaction report [CTR] be filed for each monetary transaction over $10,000, nearly 54 million reports have been filed with the Federal Government. Well intended as the 1970 law may be, such a large data base has not proven conducive to effectively using many reports.

H.R. 3235 represents an attempt to weed out those CTR's that are not of much value in law enforcement, with a goal of allowing more attention to be directed to those with a higher degree of law enforcement usefulness.

The legislation will also: centralize the reporting of suspicious transactions; subject foreign bank drafts to reporting for the first time; require the banking agencies to improve training for bank examiners to detect money-laundering schemes; and finally, the bill will require all money transmitting businesses to register with the Treasury Department.

Again, I thank Chairmen GONZALEZ and NEAL, and urge support for the bill.

□ 1220

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BILBRAY].

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my serious concerns over two sections of H.R. 3235.

Let me first commend the chairman for his efforts to combat money laundering. The legislation before us today will reduce the number of currency transaction reports banks are required to file, while making the process more effective at identifying suspicious customer transactions. However, I have serious reservations regarding sections 9 and 10 of the legislation.

One effect of sections 9 and 10 will be to eliminate the Treasury Secretary's discretion to provide exemptions from Federal currency transaction reporting regulations, even in cases where existing State law already meet Federal standards. Since the revision of Federal laws in the 1980's, Nevada has had State laws matching or surprising the Federal reporting requirements. The Treasury Department has agreed that this is the case and, as a result, has provided Nevada with an exception from Federal reporting regulations.

Eliminating the Treasury Secretary's discretion to grant an exemption will require creation of a new currency transaction reporting system that parallels the existing State reporting system in Nevada. This will result in significant new costs to my State's most important industry. It will not improve currency transaction reporting to the Federal Government.

There is no need to force Nevada to change the way it meets the requirements of title 31 of the Federal code. I am not aware of anyone who claims that Nevada's currency transaction reports are less stringent than those compiled under Federal regulations. In fact, forcing Nevada to adopt a new reporting structure would run contrary to one of the main goals under H.R. 3235.

I understand that one of the main purposes of the changes in H.R. 3235 is to reduce the drain on Federal resources related to reporting areas of marginal significance when it comes to criminal money laundering, and to focus those resources instead on improved enforcement in those areas more likely to experience significant currency transaction violations. Requiring a new Federal reporting structure to replace the existing State structure in Nevada will result in requiring additional Federal resources to be committed in an area where no substantial problems now exist.

Just last week, the Senate passed a companion bill to H.R. 3235 without sections 9 and 10. When we go to conference, I urge you to seriously consider leaving the Treasury Secretary's discretion to grant exemptions from Federal reporting regulations in place, at least as it applies to existing reporting systems. It is working well in Nevada. Nevada has worked closely with the Treasury Department over the years to ensure that Federal reporting requirements are met, and I am confident they will continue to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I support the bill, but I urge my colleagues in conference to go along with the Senate and take out sections 9 and 10.

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to respond to the comments by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BILBRAY] and thank him for his concern. He is a very dedicated Member of Congress, always looking out for the interest of his State, and I appreciate his thoughts on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, a the gentleman said, the other body has passed a similar money laundering bill, but without section 10. I anticipate that this matter will be resolved in conference in a manner which retains the section's authority to grant exemptions as appropriate, especially to States which have effective laws and enforcement to combat money laundering. I am a firm believer in Federal-State cooperation and want to assure the gentleman that I will work to resolve the differences between the two bills in a manner that balances the needs of Federal law enforcement with minimizing regulatory burdens.

The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BILBRAY] is probably aware that the Treasury Department has not requested this change. They think that they have adequate enforcement capability with their discretionary authority, so we will certainly keep that in mind as we go to the conference.

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. NEAL] for that statement.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3235, the Money Laundering Suppression Act of 1994. H.R. 3235 will greatly improve the Federal Government's ability to deal effectively with money laundering issues. The bill improves the usefulness of currency transaction reports, addresses the difficulties posed by the recent Supreme Court decision related to the crime of structuring, and reduces the reporting burdens placed on legitimate businesses without adversely affecting Federal law enforcement. The bill will also tighten up on the so-called shadow banking system of check cashers and money transmitters. For the first time, we are asking these outfits to help their Government combat money laundering.

The Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Ways and Means, which I chair, had continuously reviewed the effectiveness of Treasury and IRS programs to address money laundering and related tax evasion. I have shared the findings of the subcommittee with the Committee on Banking. The legislation before the House today effectively deals with a number of issues initially identified by the subcommittee on Oversight.

Specifically, my subcommittee found a backlog of Bank Secrecy Act [BSA] civil penalty cases at Treasury's Office of Financial Enforcement [OFE], which frustrated the regulators, and ultimately resulted in fewer penalty referrals to OFE. This legislation will address the backlog of penalty cases at OFE by delegating authority to assess penalties under BSA to IRS and bank examiners who actually conduct the investigations and detect the violations. Also, my subcommittee found that money laundering has shifted to wire-transmitters, check cashers, and other non-regulated financial institutions and that the Federal Government knows very little about the magnitude of their activities because these operations are largely unregulated at the Federal level. This legislation will require these transmitters, check cashers, and others to register with the Treasury. Further, my subcommittee found that the BSA data base contained incomplete and unnecessary currency transaction report [CTR] data. This legislation will clean up the BSA data base and improve the ability of law-enforcement agencies to access reliable data.

H.R. 3235 will also require all casinos and gaming establishments, including Indian gaming operations and the Nevada casinos, to comply with the BSA and file CTR's with IRS. We know from our oversight hearings that money laundering is taking place in casinos, and that more effective enforcement is needed. H.R. 3235 brings all casinos under the BSA umbrella. This is a sound, smart policy.

Money-laundering enforcement is more than identifying drug traffickers and confiscating their ill-gotten gains. Money laundering threatens the integrity of our voluntary tax system and, as we have learned lately, even our national security. It has been reported in the press that a CIA spy, Aldrich Hazel Ames, made numerous large cash purchases which were reported to IRS as suspicious. I have asked IRS to provide my subcommittee with a report on what actions, if any, the agency has taken in response to the Ameses' spending habits and their deposits of large cash sums.

The fight against money laundering and tax evasion is a never-ending battle as drug traffickers, tax cheats, and even spies, devise new and ingenious ways to disguise the source of their money. It seems that as soon as we act to close loopholes in our Federal laws and enforcement strategies, money launderers develop new schemes to circumvent the law. Therefore, the Congress, working with law enforcement agencies and the business and financial communities, must continue to be vigilant in this fight and prepared to meet new challenges. H.R. 3235 helps meet these challenges.

Last, I want to commend Chairmen GONZALEZ and NEAL, and the Committee on Banking, for developing a strong, responsible, and important piece of legislation. The art of money laundering is a continual state of change. We need this legislation now to give law enforcement a fighting chance. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3235.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I, too, yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3235, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The amendment shall include the following findings from the Senate bill: (1), (4), (5), and (7). The amendment shall include the following findings from the House amendment: (2), (3), (6), (8), and (9). The new finding shall be number (9) and number (9) in the House amendment shall be renumbered (10).

(b) PURPOSE.—With slightly different wording, both the Senate bill and the House amendment update the purpose of the Act.

Second, paragraph (1) from the House amendment, shall be included and shall be amended by inserting "activities (that are consistent with the policy under subsection (c)(2))" after advocacy.

Third, the amendment shall include paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) from the Senate bill.

(c) POLICY.—With slightly different wording, the Senate bill and the House amendment add a policy section to the Act.

Fourth, paragraph (6) is amended by striking "have opportunities" and inserting "should have access to opportunities".

Fifth, the amendment inserts, after paragraph (4), two additional principles to read as follows:

"(5) specific efforts must be made to ensure that individuals from racial and ethnic minority backgrounds enjoy effective and meaningful opportunities for full participation in the developmental disabilities service system;" and

"(6) recruitment efforts within development disabilities at the level of preservice training, community training, practice, administration and policy-making must focus on bringing larger numbers of racial and ethnic minorities into the field in order to provide appropriate skills, knowledge, role models, and sufficient manpower to address the growing needs of an increasingly diverse population;."

Sixth, paragraph (5) and (6) from the Senate bill are renumbered (7) and (8) respectively.

Questions have been raised regarding the meaning of the language in the first full paragraph on page 8 of the House Committee Report No. 103-378 that accompanies H.R. 3505.

In lieu of such language, the conferees make the following statement of Congressional intent:

First, the goals expressed in this Act to promote the greatest possible integration and independence for individuals with development disabilities may not be read as a Federal policy supporting the closure of residential institutions.

Second, the programs established under Parts B and D of the Act shall use the resources made available under this Act in accordance with the purposes and statement of policy set forth in the Act, including to assist States to create community options for individuals and families who state or demonstrate their desire to such options.

Third, Protection and Advocacy systems established under Part C of the Act shall use the resources made available under this Act in accordance with the purposes and statement of policy set forth in the Act, and are authorized to pursue appropriate remedies to address the violation of rights under other laws in all settings, including community, and ICF/MR institutions. This includes responding to ICF/MR reports and correction plans and complaints concerning community placements.

2. Definitions

The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, updates several definitions, adds new definitions, deletes definitions that are obsolete, and alphabetizes the definitions.

The House recedes with an amendment. First, the section is amended by inserting a definition for the term "Culturally Competent" as follows: "The term 'culturally competent' means services, supports or other assistance that are conducted or provided in a manner that is responsive to the beliefs, interpersonal styles, attitudes, language and behaviors of individuals who are receiving services, and in a manner which has the greatest likelihood of ensuring their maximum participation in the program."

This replaces a provision that requires Councils to review each report and each plan.

The House recedes.

(b) The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, strikes "1902(a)(31)(C)" in section 107(a)(4) of the Act and inserts "1902(a)(31)(C)." This is simply a more general reference and does not change the intent of this provision.

Also the concepts of consumer and family-centered are added by the bill to reflect the principles that services, supports and other assistance should be provided in a manner that demonstrates respect for individual dignity, personal preferences, and cultural differences, and that individuals with developmental disabilities and their families are the primary decisionmakers regarding the services, supports and other assistance they receive.

First, the amendment inserts a new provision after section 122(c)(3)(C)(ii) as amended by the Senate bill, specifying that the examination of the priority areas required in the comprehensive review and analysis, include "an analysis of the barriers which impede full participation by members of unserved and underserved groups". 5. Designated state agencies

The Senate bill, but to the House amendment, incorporates provisions related to the designated State agency into a single subsection, adds a reference to the role of the State legislature in the redesignation process, replaces the phrase "administrative support services" with the phrase "support services" to describe the type of services that are provided to the Council by the designated State agency, clarifies procedures for redesignation and clarifies the responsibilities of the State agency.

The House recedes.

7. State allotments

The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, adds a provision that holds each State harmless at the higher of the fiscal year 1992 or fiscal year 1993 levels, with a ratable reduction if funds are not adequate. Sections 125 (c) and (d) of the Act shall be relettered (d) and (e) respectively.

8. Federal and non-Federal share

The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, adds a new section on Federal and non-Federal share. This section groups together related provisions from the Act, including the provision on non-duplication The bill adds two new provisions—a waiver of the non-Federal share requirement when Council members and staff are the implementing agents of State plan priority activities and a clarification that Councils may vary the non-Federal share required on a grant-by-grant basis, as long as the total non-Federal share meets the statutory requirements.

The House recedes.

9. Review, analysis and report

The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, directs the Secretary to (1) review and analyze the current allotment formula under parts B and C, including the factors, data elements and measures, to determine whether the formula used is consistent with the purpose of the Act, (2) identify alternative funding formulas, consistent with the purpose of the Act, and (3) report back to the relevant Committees in the Senate and the House no later than October 1, 1995.

3. Authorization of appropriations

The Senate bill authorizes $29,000,000 for fiscal year 1994, and such sums for 1995 and 1996. The House amendment authorizes $24,000,000 for 1994, and such sums for 1995 and 1996.

PART D—UNIVERSITY AFFILIATED PROGRAMS

1. Purpose and scope of activities

The description of UAPs recognizes the fact that UAPs are located in, or affiliated with universities and, as such, provide an important foundation for higher education's response to the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. UAPs contribute to and reflect the overall mission of their host universities, and seek to ensure that the activities, resources, and expertise of the university are responsive to individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, advocacy organizations, and service systems and providers.

SEC. 101. MULTIFAMILY PROPERTY DISPOSITION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the portfolio of multifamily housing project mortgages insured by the FHA is severely troubled and at risk of default, requiring the Secretary to increase loss reserves from $5,500,000,000 in 1991 to $11,900,000,000 in 1992 to cover estimated future losses;

(2) the inventory of multifamily housing projects owned by the Secretary has more than quadrupled since 1989, and, by the end of 1994, may exceed 69,000 units;

(3) the cost to the Federal Government of owning and maintaining multifamily housing projects escalated to $288,000,000 in fiscal year 1993;

(4) the inventory of multifamily housing projects subject to mortgages held by the Secretary has increased dramatically, to more than 2,400 mortgages, and approximately half of these mortgages, with approximately 219,000 units, are delinquent;

(5) the inventory of insured and formerly insured multifamily housing projects is deteriorating, potentially endangering tenants and neighborhoods; and

(6) the current statutory framework governing the disposition of multifamily housing projects effectively impedes the Government's ability to dispose of properties, protect tenants, and ensure that projects are maintained over time.

"SEC. 203. MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSITION OF MULTIFAMILY HOUSING PROJECTS.

"(a) GOALS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall manage or dispose of multifamily housing projects that are owned by the Secretary or that are subject to a mortgage held by the Secretary in a manner that—

"(ii) by low-income families other than very low-income families, the rent does not exceed 30 percent of 80 percent of the area median income, as determined by the Secretary, with adjustments for smaller and larger families; or

"(B) the unit, or the family residing in the unit, is receiving assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

"(6) LOW-INCOME FAMILIES AND VERY LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—The terms 'low-income families' and 'very low-income families' shall have the meanings given the terms in section 3(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

"(c) DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.—

"(1) DISPOSITION TO PURCHASERS.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary may dispose of a multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary on a negotiated, competitive bid, or other basis, on such terms as the Secretary deems appropriate considering the low-income character of the project and consistent with the goals in subsection (a), only to a purchaser determined by the Secretary to be capable of—

"(A) satisfying the conditions of the disposition plan developed under paragraph (2) for the project;

"(B) implementing a sound financial and physical management program that is designed to enable the project to meet anticipated operating and repair expenses to ensure that the project will remain in decent, safe, and sanitary condition and in compliance with any standards under applicable State or local laws, rules, ordinances, or regulations relating to the physical condition of the housing and any such standards established by the Secretary;

"(C) responding to the needs of the tenants and working cooperatively with tenant organizations;

"(D) providing adequate organizational, staff, and financial resources to the project; and

"(E) meeting such other requirements as the Secretary may determine.

"(2) DISPOSITION PLAN.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Prior to the sale of a multifamily housing project that is owned by the Secretary, the Secretary shall develop an initial disposition plan for the project that specifies the minimum terms and conditions of the Secretary for disposition of the project, the initial sales price that is acceptable to the Secretary, and the assistance that the Secretary plans to make available to a prospective purchaser in accordance with this section.

"(B) MARKET-WIDE PLANS.—In developing the initial disposition plan under this subsection for a multifamily housing project located in a market area in which at least 1 other multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary is located, the Secretary may coordinate the disposition of all such multifamily housing projects located within the same market area to the extent and in such manner as the Secretary determines appropriate to carry out the goals under subsection (a).

"(C) SALES PRICE.—The initial sales price shall be reasonably related to the intended use of the project after sale, any rehabilitation requirements for the project, the rents for units in the project that can be supported by the market, the amount of rental assistance available for the project under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, the occupancy profile of the project (including family size and income levels for tenant families), and any other factors that the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(D) COMMUNITY AND TENANT INPUT.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall develop procedures—

"(i) to obtain appropriate and timely input into disposition plans from officials of the unit of general local government affected, the community in which the project is situated, and the tenants of the project; and

"(ii) to facilitate, where feasible and appropriate, the sale of multifamily housing projects to existing tenant organizations with demonstrated capacity, to public or nonprofit entities that represent or are affiliated with existing tenant organizations, or to other public or nonprofit entities.

"(E) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—To carry out the procedures developed under subparagraph (D), the Secretary may provide technical assistance, directly or indirectly, and may use amounts available for technical assistance under the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987, subtitle C of the Low-Income Housing Preservation and Resident Homeownership Act of 1990, subtitle B of title IV of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, or this section, for the provision of technical assistance under this paragraph. Recipients of technical assistance funding under the provisions referred to in this subparagraph shall be permitted to provide technical assistance to the extent of such funding under any of such provisions or under this subparagraph, notwithstanding the source of the funding.

"(3) FORECLOSURE SALE.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall—

"(A) prior to foreclosing on any mortgage held by the Secretary on any multifamily housing project, notify both the unit of general local government in which the property is located and the tenants of the property of the proposed foreclosure sale; and

"(B) dispose of a multifamily housing project through a foreclosure sale only to a purchaser that the Secretary determines is capable of implementing a sound financial and physical management program that is designed to enable the project to meet anticipated operating and repair expenses to ensure that the project will remain in decent, safe, and sanitary condition and in compliance with any standards under applicable State or local laws, rules, ordinances, or regulations relating to the physical condition of the housing and any such standards established by the Secretary.

"(d) MANAGEMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF PROPERTIES.—

"(1) CONTRACTING FOR MANAGEMENT SERVICES.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary may—

"(A) contract for management services for a multifamily housing project that is owned by the Secretary (or for which the Secretary is mortgagee in possession) with for-profit and nonprofit entities and public agencies (including public housing authorities) on a negotiated, competitive bid, or other basis at a price determined by the Secretary to be reasonable, with a manager the Secretary has determined is capable of—

"(i) implementing a sound financial and physical management program that is designed to enable the project to meet anticipated operating and maintenance expenses to ensure that the project will remain in decent, safe, and sanitary condition and in compliance with any standards under applicable State or local laws, rules, ordinances, or regulations relating to the physical condition of the project and any such standards established by the Secretary;

"(ii) responding to the needs of the tenants and working cooperatively with tenant organizations;

"(iii) providing adequate organizational, staff, and financial resources to the project; and

"(iv) meeting such other requirements as the Secretary may determine; and

"(B) require the owner of a multifamily housing project that is subject to a mortgage held by the Secretary to contract for management services for the project in the manner described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) MAINTENANCE OF PROJECTS OWNED BY SECRETARY.—In the case of multifamily housing projects that are owned by the Secretary (or for which the Secretary is mortgagee in possession), the Secretary shall—

"(A) to the greatest extent possible, maintain all such occupied projects in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition and in compliance with any standards under applicable State or local laws, rules, ordinances, or regulations relating to the physical condition of the housing and any such standards established by the Secretary;

"(B) to the greatest extent possible, maintain full occupancy in all such projects; and

"(C) maintain all such projects for purposes of providing rental or cooperative housing.

"(3) PROJECTS SUBJECT TO A MORTGAGE HELD BY SECRETARY.—In the case of any multifamily housing project that is subject to a mortgage held by the Secretary, the Secretary shall require the owner of the project to carry out the requirements of paragraph (2).

"(e) REQUIRED ASSISTANCE.—In disposing of multifamily housing property under this section, consistent with the goals of section 203(a)(3)(A), the Secretary shall take, separately or in combination with other actions under this subsection or subsection (f), one or more of the following actions:

"(1) CONTRACT WITH OWNER FOR PROJECT-BASED ASSISTANCE.—In the case of multifamily housing projects that are acquired by a purchaser other than the Secretary at foreclosure or after sale by the Secretary, the Secretary may enter into contracts under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (to the extent budget authority is available) with owners of the projects, subject to the following requirements:

"(A) SUBSIDIZED OR FORMERLY SUBSIDIZED PROJECTS RECEIVING MORTGAGE-RELATED ASSISTANCE.—In the case of a subsidized or formerly subsidized project referred to in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (b)(2)—

"(i) the contract shall be sufficient to assist at least all units covered by an assistance contract under any of the authorities referred to in subsection (b)(2)(D) before acquisition or foreclosure, unless the Secretary acts pursuant to the provisions of subparagraph (C);

"(ii) the contract shall provide that, when a vacancy occurs in any unit in the project requiring project-based rental assistance pursuant to this subparagraph that is occupied by a family who is not eligible for assistance under such section 8, the owner shall lease the available unit to a family eligible for assistance under such section 8; and

"(iii) the Secretary shall take actions to ensure that any unit in any such project that does not otherwise receive project-based assistance under this subparagraph remains available and affordable for the remaining useful life of the project, as defined by the Secretary; to carry out this clause, the Secretary may require purchasers to establish use or rent restrictions maintaining the affordability of such units.

"(B) SUBSIDIZED OR FORMERLY SUBSIDIZED PROJECTS RECEIVING RENTAL ASSISTANCE.—In the case of a subsidized or formerly subsidized project referred to in subsection (b)(2)(D) that is not subject to subparagraph (A)—

"(i) the contract shall be sufficient to assist at least all units in the project that are covered, or were covered immediately before foreclosure on or acquisition of the project by the Secretary, by an assistance contract under any of the provisions referred to in such subsection, unless the Secretary acts pursuant to provisions of subparagraph (C); and

"(ii) the contract shall provide that, when a vacancy occurs in any unit in the project requiring project-based rental assistance pursuant to this subparagraph that is occupied by a family who is not eligible for assistance under such section 8, the owner shall lease the available unit to a family eligible for assistance under such section 8.

"(C) EXCEPTIONS.—

"(i) AUTHORITY.—In lieu of providing project-based assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 in accordance with subparagraph (A)(i) or (B)(i) for a project, the Secretary may, for certain units in unsubsidized projects located within the same market area as the project otherwise required to be assisted with such project-based assistance—

"(I) require use and rent restrictions providing that such units shall be available to and affordable by very low-income families for the remaining useful life of the project (as defined by the Secretary), or

"(II) provide project-based assistance under section 8 for such units to be occupied by only very low-income persons, but only if the requirements under clause (ii) are met.

"(ii) REQUIREMENTS.—The requirements under this clause are that—

"(I) upon the disposition of the project otherwise required to be assisted with project-based assistance under subparagraph (A)(i) or (B)(i), the Secretary shall make available tenant-based assistance under section 8 to low-income families residing in units otherwise required to be assisted with such project-based assistance; and

"(II) the number of units subject to use restrictions or provided assistance under clause (i) shall be at least equivalent to the number of units otherwise required to be assisted with project-based assistance under section 8 in accordance with subparagraph (A)(i) or (B)(i).

"(D) UNSUBSIDIZED PROJECTS.—Notwithstanding actions taken pursuant to subparagraph (C), in the case of unsubsidized projects, the contract shall be sufficient to provide—

"(i) project-based rental assistance for all units that are covered, or were covered immediately before foreclosure or acquisition, by an assistance contract under—

"(I) the new construction and substantial rehabilitation program under section 8(b)(2) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (as in effect before October 1, 1983);

"(II) the property disposition program under section 8(b) of such Act;

"(III) the project-based certificate program under section 8 of such Act;

"(IV) the moderate rehabilitation program under section 8(e)(2) of such Act;

"(V) section 23 of such Act (as in effect before January 1, 1975);

"(VI) the rent supplement program under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965; or

"(VII) section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, following conversion from assistance under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965; and

"(ii) tenant-based assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 for families that are preexisting tenants of the project in units that, immediately before foreclosure or acquisition of the project by the Secretary, were covered by an assistance contract under the loan management set-aside program under section 8(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

"(2) Annual Contribution Contracts for Tenant-Based Assistance.—In the case of multifamily housing projects that are acquired by a purchaser other than the Secretary at foreclosure or after sale by the Secretary, the Secretary may enter into annual contribution contracts with public housing agencies to provide tenant-based assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 on behalf of all low-income families who are otherwise eligible for assistance in accordance with subparagraph (A), (B), or (D) of paragraph (1) on the date that the project is acquired by the purchaser, subject to the following requirements:

"(A) Requirement of Sufficient Affordable Housing in Area.—The Secretary may not take action under this paragraph unless the Secretary determines that there is available in the area an adequate supply of habitable, affordable housing for very low-income families and other low-income families using tenant-based assistance.

"(B) Limitation for Subsidized and Formerly Subsidized Projects.—The Secretary may not take actions under this paragraph in connection with units in subsidized or formerly subsidized projects for more than 10 percent of the aggregate number of units in such projects disposed of by the Secretary in any fiscal year.

"(3) Other Assistance.—

"(A) In General.—In accordance with the authority provided under the National Housing Act, the Secretary may provide other assistance pursuant to subsection (f) to the owners of multifamily housing projects that are acquired by a purchaser other than the Secretary at foreclosure, or after sale by the Secretary, on terms that ensure that—

"(i) at least the units in the project otherwise required to receive project-based assistance pursuant to subparagraphs (A), (B), or (D) of paragraph (1) are available to and affordable by low-income persons; and

"(ii) for the remaining useful life of the project, as defined by the Secretary, there shall be in force such use or rent restrictions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(B) Very Low-Income Tenants.—If, as a result of actions taken pursuant to this paragraph, the rents charged to any very low-income families residing in the project who are otherwise required (pursuant to subparagraph (A), (B), or (D) of paragraph (1)) to receive project-based assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 exceed the amount payable as rent under section 3(a) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, the Secretary shall provide tenant-based assistance under section 8 of such Act to such families.

"(f) Discretionary Assistance.—In addition to the actions required under subsection (e) for a subsidized, formerly subsidized, or unsubsidized multifamily housing project, the Secretary may, pursuant to the disposition plan and the goals in subsection (a), take one or more of the following actions:

"(1) Discounted Sales Price.—In accordance with the authority provided under the National Housing Act, the Secretary may reduce the selling price of the project. Such reduced sales price shall be reasonably related to the intended use of the property after sale, any rehabilitation requirements for the project, the rents for units in the project that can be supported by the market, the amount of rental assistance available for the project under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, the occupancy profile of the project (including family size and income levels for tenant families), and any other factors that the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(2) Use and Rent Restrictions.—The Secretary may require certain units in a project to be subject to use or rent restrictions providing that such units will be available to and affordable by low- and very low-income persons for the remaining useful life of the property, as defined by the Secretary.

"(3) Short-Term Loans.—The Secretary may provide short-term loans to facilitate the sale of a multifamily housing project if—

"(A) authority for such loans is provided in advance in an appropriation Act;

"(B) such loan has a term of not more than 5 years;

"(C) the Secretary determines, based upon documentation provided to the Secretary, that the borrower has obtained a commitment of permanent financing to replace the short-term loan from a lender who meets standards established by the Secretary; and

"(D) the terms of such loan are consistent with prevailing practices in the marketplace or the provision of such loan results in no cost to the Government, as defined in section 502 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

"(4) Up-Front Grants.—If the Secretary determines that action under this paragraph is more cost-effective than establishing rents pursuant to subsection (h)(2), the Secretary may utilize the budget authority provided for contracts issued under this section for project-based assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 to (in addition to providing project-based section 8 rental assistance) provide up-front grants for the necessary cost of rehabilitation and other related development costs.

"(5) Tenant-Based Assistance.—The Secretary may make available tenant-based assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 to families residing in a multifamily housing project that do not otherwise qualify for project-based assistance.

"(6) Alternative Uses.—

"(A) In General.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, after providing notice to and an opportunity for comment by preexisting tenants, the Secretary may allow not more than—

"(i) 10 percent of the total number of units in multifamily housing projects that are disposed of by the Secretary during any fiscal year to be made available for uses other than rental or cooperative uses, including low-income homeownership opportunities, or in any particular project, community space, office space for tenant or housing-related service providers or security programs, or small business uses, if such uses benefit the tenants of the project; and

"(ii) 5 percent of the total number of units in multifamily housing projects that are disposed of by the Secretary during any fiscal year to be used in any manner, if the Secretary and the unit of general local government or area-wide governing body determine that such use will further fair housing, community development, or neighborhood revitalization goals.

"(B) Displacement Protection.—The Secretary may take actions under subparagraph (A) only if—

"(i) tenant-based rental assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is made available to each eligible family residing in the project that is displaced as a result of such actions; and

"(ii) the Secretary determines that sufficient habitable, affordable rental housing is available in the market area in which the project is located to ensure use of such assistance.

"(7) Transfer for Use Under Other Programs of Secretary.—

"(A) In General.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (e), the Secretary may, pursuant to an agreement under subparagraph (B), transfer a multifamily housing project—

"(i) to a public housing agency for use of the project as public housing; or

"(ii) to an entity eligible to own or operate housing assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 or under section 811 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act for use as supportive housing under either of such sections.

"(B) Requirements for Agreement.—An agreement providing for the transfer of a project described in subparagraph (A) shall—

"(i) contain such terms, conditions, and limitations as the Secretary determines appropriate, including requirements to ensure use of the project as public housing, supportive housing under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, or supportive housing under section 811 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, as applicable; and

"(ii) ensure that no tenant of the project will be displaced as a result of actions taken under this paragraph.

"(8) Rebuilding.—Notwithstanding any provision of section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, the Secretary may provide project-based assistance in accordance with subsection (e) of this section to support the rebuilding of a multifamily housing project rebuilt or to be rebuilt (in whole or in part and on-site, off-site, or in a combination of both) in connection with disposition under this section, if the Secretary determines that—

"(A) the project is not being maintained in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition;

"(B) rebuilding the project would be less expensive than substantial rehabilitation;

"(C) the unit of general local government in which the project is located approves the rebuilding and makes a financial contribution or other commitment to the project; and

"(D) the rebuilding is a part of a local neighborhood revitalization plan approved by the unit of general local government.

The provisions of subsection (j)(2) shall apply to any tenants of the project who are displaced.

"(9) Emergency assistance funds.—The Secretary may make arrangements with State agencies and units of general local government of States receiving emergency assistance under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act for the provision of assistance under such Act on behalf of eligible families who would reside in any multifamily housing projects.

"(g) Protection for Unassisted Very Low-Income Tenants.—For each multifamily housing project disposed of under this section, the Secretary shall require that, for any very low-income family who is a preexisting tenant of the project who (upon disposition) would be required to pay rent in an amount in excess of 30 percent of the adjusted income (as such term is defined in section 3(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937) of the family—

"(1) for a period of 2 years beginning upon the date of the acquisition of the project by the purchaser under such disposition, the rent for the unit occupied by the family may not be increased above the rent charged immediately before acquisition;

"(2) such family shall be considered displaced for purposes of the preferences for assistance under sections 6(c)(4)(A)(i), 8(d)(1)(A)(i), and 8(o)(3)(B) of the United States Housing Act of 1937; and

"(3) notice shall be provided to such family, not later than the date of the acquisition of the project by the purchaser—

"(A) of the requirements under paragraphs (1) and (2); and

"(B) that, after the expiration of the period under paragraph (1), the rent for the unit occupied by the family may be increased.

"(h) Contract Requirements.—Contracts for project-based rental assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 provided pursuant to this section shall be subject to the following requirements:

"(1) Contract term.—The contract shall have a term of 15 years, except that the term may be less than 15 years—

"(A) to the extent that the Secretary finds that, based on the rental charges and financing for the multifamily housing project to which the contract relates, the financial viability of the project can be maintained under a contract having such a term; except that the Secretary shall require that the amount of rent payable by tenants of the project for units assisted under such contract shall not exceed the amount payable for rent under section 3(a) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 for a period of at least 15 years; or

"(B) if such assistance is provided—

"(i) under a contract authorized under section 6 of the HUD Demonstration Act of 1993; and

"(ii) pursuant to a disposition plan under this section for a project that is determined by the Secretary to be otherwise in compliance with this section.

"(2) Contract rent.—The Secretary shall establish the contract rents under such contracts at levels that, together with other resources available to the purchasers, provide sufficient amounts for the necessary costs of rehabilitating and operating the multifamily housing project and do not exceed the percentage of the existing housing fair market rentals for the market area in which the project assisted under the contract is located as determined by the Secretary under section 8(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

"(i) Right of First Refusal for Local and State Government Agencies.—

"(1) Notification.—Not later than 30 days after the Secretary acquires title to a multifamily housing project, the Secretary shall notify the appropriate unit of general local government (including public housing agencies) and State agency or agencies designated by the chief executive officer of the State in which the project is located of such acquisition of title and that, for a period beginning upon such notification that does not exceed 90 days, such unit of general local government and agency or agencies shall have the exclusive right under this subsection to make bona fide offers to purchase the project.

"(2) Right of first refusal.—During the 90-day period, the Secretary may not sell or offer to sell the multifamily housing project other than to a party notified under paragraph (1), unless the unit of general local government and the designated State agency or agencies notify the Secretary that they will not make an offer to purchase the project. The Secretary shall accept a bona fide offer to purchase the project made during such period if it complies with the terms and conditions of the disposition plan for the project or is otherwise acceptable to the Secretary.

"(3) Procedure.—The Secretary shall establish any procedures necessary to carry out this subsection.

"(j) Displacement of Tenants and Relocation Assistance.—

"(1) In general.—Whenever tenants will be displaced as a result of the demolition of, repairs to, or conversion in the use of, a multifamily housing project that is owned by the Secretary (or for which the Secretary is mortgagee in possession), the Secretary shall identify tenants who will be displaced, and shall notify all such tenants of their pending displacement and of any relocation assistance that may be available. In the case of a multifamily housing project that is subject to a mortgage held by the Secretary, the Secretary shall require the owner of the project to carry out the requirements of this paragraph, if the Secretary has authorized the demolition of, repairs to, or conversion in the use of such multifamily housing project.

"(2) Rights of displaced tenants.—The Secretary shall ensure for any such tenant (who continues to meet applicable qualification standards) the right—

"(A) to return, whenever possible, to a repaired or rebuilt unit;

"(B) to occupy a unit in another multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary;

"(C) to obtain housing assistance under the United States Housing Act of 1937; or

"(D) to receive any other available similar relocation assistance as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

"(k) Mortgage and Project Sales.—

"(1) In general.—The Secretary may not approve the sale of any loan or mortgage held by the Secretary (including any loan or mortgage owned by the Government National Mortgage Association) on any subsidized project or formerly subsidized project, unless such sale is made as part of a transaction that will ensure that such project will continue to operate at least until the maturity date of such loan or mortgage, in a manner that will provide rental housing on terms at least as advantageous to existing and future tenants as the terms required by the program under which the loan or mortgage was made or insured prior to the assignment of the loan or mortgage on such project to the Secretary.

"(2) Sale of certain projects.—The Secretary may not approve the sale of any subsidized project—

"(A) that is subject to a mortgage held by the Secretary, or

"(B) if the sale transaction involves the provision of any additional subsidy funds by the Secretary or a recasting of the mortgage, unless such sale is made as part of a transaction that will ensure that the project will continue to operate, at least until the maturity date of the loan or mortgage, in a manner that will provide rental housing on terms at least as advantageous to existing and future tenants as the terms required by the program under which the loan or mortgage was made or insured prior to the proposed sale of the project.

"(3) Mortgage sales to State and local governments.—Notwithstanding any provision of law that requires competitive sales or bidding, the Secretary may carry out negotiated sales of mortgages held by the Secretary, without the competitive selection of purchasers or intermediaries, to units of general local government or State agencies, or groups of investors that include at least one such unit of general local government or State agency, if the negotiations are conducted with such agencies, except that—

"(A) the terms of any such sale shall include the agreement of the purchasing agency or unit of local government or State agency to act as mortgagee or owner of a beneficial interest in such mortgages, in a manner consistent with maintaining the projects that are subject to such mortgages for occupancy by the general tenant group intended to be served by the applicable mortgage insurance program, including, to the extent the Secretary determines appropriate, authorizing such unit of local government or State agency to enforce the provisions of any regulatory agreement or other program requirements applicable to the related projects; and

"(B) the sales prices for such mortgages shall be, in the determination of the Secretary, the best prices that may be obtained for such mortgages from a unit of general local government or State agency, consistent with the expectation and intention that the projects financed will be retained for use under the applicable mortgage insurance program for the life of the initial mortgage insurance contract.

"(4) Sale of mortgages covering unsubsidized projects.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may sell mortgages held on projects that are not subsidized or formerly subsidized projects on such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(5) Mortgage sale demonstration.—The Secretary may carry out a demonstration to test the feasibility of restructuring and disposing of troubled multifamily mortgages held by the Secretary through the establishment of partnerships with public, private, and nonprofit entities.

"(6) Project sale demonstration.—The Secretary may carry out a demonstration to test the feasibility of disposing of troubled multifamily housing projects that are owned by the Secretary through the establishment of partnerships with public, private, and nonprofit entities.

"(l) Report to Congress.—Not later than June 1 of each year, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report describing the status of multifamily housing projects owned by or subject to mortgages held by the Secretary, on an aggregate basis, which highlights the differences, if any, between the subsidized and the unsubsidized inventory. The report shall include—

"(1) the average and median size of the projects;

"(2) the geographic locations of the projects, by State and region;

"(3) the years during which projects were assigned to the Department, and the average and median length of time that projects remain in the HUD-held inventory;

"(4) the status of HUD-held mortgages;

"(5) the physical condition of the HUD-held and HUD-owned inventory;

"(6) the occupancy profile of the projects, including the income, family size, race, and ethnic origin of current tenants, and the rents paid by such tenants;

"(7) the proportion of units that are vacant;

"(8) the number of projects for which the Secretary is mortgagee in possession;

"(9) the number of projects sold in foreclosure sales;

"(10) the number of HUD-owned projects sold;

"(11) a description of actions undertaken pursuant to this section, including a description of the effectiveness of such actions and any impediments to the disposition or management of multifamily housing projects;

"(12) a description of the extent to which the provisions of this section and actions taken under this section have displaced tenants of multifamily housing projects;

"(13) a description of any of the functions performed in connection with this section that are contracted out to public or private entities or to States; and

"(14) a description of the activities carried out under subsection (i) during the preceding year.".

(c) CLARIFICATION OF FEDERAL PREFERENCES.—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to offer H.R. 4067, the Multifamily Property Disposition Reform Act of 1994, as amended. H.R. 4067, a bipartisan measure, amends the multifamily property disposition program administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and provides other technical changes and reforms. The property disposition reforms refine and simplify the reforms adopted by the House in H.R. 3400, the Government Reform and Savings Act, last November. They strike a necessary and critical balance among the need to preserve affordable rental housing, protect low-income tenants from displacement and outlandish rent increases, accelerate the property disposition process and save the Federal Government perhaps as much as $475 million.

These property disposition reforms provide HUD with the flexibility it needs to dispose of the backlog of multifamily property in the inventory and place disposition efforts within the context of local market conditions. The reforms also provide for the first time an array of incentives and tools for purchasers of inventory property.

Although the number of families required to receive section 8 assistance will be reduced as compared to current law, the reforms do provide meaningful displacement protection. Projects will not be sold without sufficient subsidy to remain viable over the long haul. And the bill requires a 2-year freeze on rents for unassisted very low-income tenants whose rents would exceed 30 percent adjusted income after disposition and a Federal preference for public housing and section 8 assistance at the end of that 2-year period.

I am confident that this approach will not only preserve and maintain affordable housing for low-income families, but will accelerate the property disposition process that has been at a virtual standstill to the real detriment of the low-income families now residing in inventory property. At the same time, there will be real budget savings.

H.R. 4067 also includes reforms and technical changes to prevent future defaults in HUD's multifamily properties, to improve the usage of the home program funds and the section 108 loan guarantee funds, and to clarify several public housing provisions.

H.R. 4067 enjoys the support, agreement, and encouragement of both sides of the aisle, both sides of the Capitol and the administration. I urge the adoption of H.R. 4067.

I particularly want to thank MARGE ROUKEMA, BARNEY FRANK, RICHARD BAKER, and JOE KENNEDY for their help in hammering out these provisions.

□ 1230

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this suspension legislation although I do so with two reservations.

First, while this legislation does address much needed changes to the Department of HUD's multi-family property disposition inventory, it does contain some 24 additional provisions which, while not controversial and in some cases are technical in nature, were added at the insistence of the administration and the other body. They clearly do not need to be addressed at this time.

Second, I am extremely disappointed with the Department of HUD's deliberate foot-dragging with respect to the issuance of its rules allowing public housing authorities to designate elderly only housing.

Two years ago, this Congress, recognizing the growing, and often dangerous, problem of mixing the elderly with the nonelderly mentally ill, handicapped and recovering drug addicts, passed important legislation permitting public housing authorities to designate housing for elderly only.

Today, HUD still has not issued its regulations. This is a disgrace. It is unfair to our elderly population. It represents an inexcusable and unacceptable arrogance and a total disregard for the will of the Congress.

If the chairman and I had not worked so long and hard on this property disposition effort, I would recommend the defeat of this bill until HUD complied with the law.

Having said that, let me address the legislation at hand.

As my colleagues may recall, last fall, both the House and the Senate passed legislation, H.R. 3400 and S. 1299 respectively, which among other things contained a very detailed reform of the multi-family property disposition program designed to help HUD reduce the size of its inventory and to help save taxpayer funds. H.R. 3400 was the Government Reform and Savings Act which the Senate failed to adopt and S. 1299 was an administration housing bill which the House did not consider.

Since that time, and because of the importance of this issue, Chairman GONZALEZ and I have been working with HUD and the Senate to remove provisions from both bills which many, including HUD, considered impediments to helping HUD sell these properties and to try and develop another bill which we could move on an expedited basis. The bill we are considering today represents our best effort to address this disposition crisis.

The management and disposition of HUD's multifamily inventory is one of the most pressing problems facing the Agency today. According to the GAO, HUD has paid out $1.7 billion in claims on 441 properties from FHA insurance funds. These properties, now held in HUD's inventory, have incurred more than $288 million in holding costs in fiscal year 1993. In addition, there are continuing and additional costs of providing rental assistance to those properties HUD holds.

HUD has, in effect, become a real estate management agency, because it has been forced to take over mortgages on low-income properties it has subsidized or insured over the past 20 years. HUD has also become a slumlord, in some cases, due to the condition of the projects taken over and because of HUD's inability to ensure the proper management of these properties.

What has exacerbated the problem to date is that in 1987 Congress legislated stringent requirements on the sale of these properties in order to preserve and expand the inventory of affordable housing for low-income households.

Unfortunately, and despite that noteworthy goal, two critical factors have inhibited HUD's ability to sell these properties.

First, current law requires HUD to sell all properties it takes over, with long-term rental assistance, such as 15-year project based section 8 assistance. This requirement is very costly.

Second, to comply with this requirement, HUD would need an estimated $5.4 billion in 15-year section 8 budget authority over the next 5 years to cover these projects. Current fiscal year 1994 appropriations for this program were $555 million, an amount which would dispose of only 6,733 units. Consider that at the end of 1993, HUD had over 31,000 units in its inventory and holds over 2,400 mortgages which could fall into foreclosure.

The result has been a real catch-22, and disposition gridlock. The law of unintended consequences had taken over.

On the one hand, HUD must manage and rehabilitate projects for which it is not adequately staffed and for which it incurs an annual holding cost of some $288 million. And, the Congress has been reluctant to provide the necessary funds. On the other hand, HUD cannot sell the properties because private investors and real estate managers do not want to buy properties which must be 100 percent subsidized.

The solution to this growing crises is complex. It must balance HUD's mission to provide affordable housing for low- and moderate-income families with the proper amount of flexibility to allow HUD to sell these properties in a effective and efficient manner.

The legislation before us today must, therefore, be enacted in order to revise current law and give HUD the necessary flexibility and tools to limit the subsidy requirements for the disposition of the properties.

H.R. 4067 would:

Permit HUD to sell market rate properties to market rate tenants thus ensuring a proper return to the HUD insurance fund.

Eliminate the requirement that HUD held properties be sold with long-term rental assistance for every unit.

It allows the Secretary to lower the sales price to expedite sales.

It permits state and local governments to have a right of first refusal to purchase while permitting private sector and nonprofits to purchase properties as well.

It permits the Secretary the flexibility to provide rehabilitation grants, short-term loans, bulk sales and other necessary tools to aid in disposition.

It provides a series of tenant protection.

This legislation also includes a few other housing-related issues which were passed as part of S. 1299 and which are either technical in nature or noncontroversial matters.

These include changes to the HOME Investment Partnership Program, including:

A change in the definition of a "State" to allow other designated State agencies to receive HOME funds.

Establishment of a flat 25 percent match for all Home activities.

A clarification of the first-time homebuyer provisions.

Permitting recaptured HOME funds through housing sales to be used for any eligible program within HOME.

The bill also includes changes to the Section 108 Loan Guarantee Program to allow HUD to pool notes to guarantee certain obligations, to extend eligible activities to include public facilities, and to authorize recaptured UDAG funds to be distributed as new grants for economic development.

I urge the Members to support this legislation.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, tenants who now enjoy section 8 housing will be required after 2 years to find new housing under section 8. Is that a correct interpretation?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, the rents may go up under this law, but they will still be level for section 8 housing. Would the chairman like to comment on that? They will still qualify. Is that not correct?

Mr. GONZALEZ. If the gentlewoman will yield, if they have section 8, they will still continue.

Mr. YATES. If the gentlewoman will yield further, will they be able to retain their present section 8 housing after a 2-year period?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Yes. They will retain their section 8 certificates.

Mr. YATES. Providing they pay rent increases?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will yield further, not necessarily will they be paying rent increases.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, in response to our colleague, I must tell him that this is the most equitable treatment for all parties concerned. We cannot continue to hold these properties at great expense with nobody really benefiting in the end.

I would conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that there are other provisions concerning the market values of the properties. I will not go into that now. It will be in the RECORD.

But I believe, Mr. Speaker, whether the other technical amendments or the particular specifics of this legislation, they should have strong bipartisan support. They are noncontroversial and in the best interests of all our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I was visited this morning by a group of section 8 tenants from my district. I understand that such tenants have come in from various urban communities all over the country, very much disturbed by this bill.

The way it was explained to me by them, one, this bill has had no hearings. And they were not given the opportunity to express their opinions on the bill.

Is that a correct statement?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, no, it is not. We have had hearings. We certainly have had.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman has held hearings on this?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, yes, we did.

The gentleman will recall that in my introductory statement I mentioned that this reflected the bill we passed last year.

In fact, I said, this amends the Multifamily Property Disposition Program administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. And it refines and simplifies the reforms adopted by H.R. 3400, which we passed out last year.

Let me say this: The record should show that the gentleman from Illinois has been one of the most faithful and strong supporters and knowledgeable Members of all of these assisted housing programs, particularly since he has quite a number of tenants affected in his district. I have been very happy to have received his support during the past years, when there were efforts to do the very thing the gentleman fears and that these groups fear.

Unfortunately, I am afraid these groups did not properly prepare themselves to advance the cause. I am sure that is the reason I had not heard from my distinguished colleagues and beloved friend until this moment.

Mr. YATES. Until this moment.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Let me assure the gentleman that I would not have stood by and abided to see what the gentleman has helped the struggle for be cast aside, under no circumstances. I can assure the gentleman that this does anchor down the protections that we have in place in the laws that we have passed in the immediate past Congress.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman that I appreciate very much the words he has said about my interest in the problems of housing. Like the gentleman, who I know is very much interested in providing housing for those who can find no affordable housing on the market today because none is being built, no such housing is being built. It was represented to me by some of the tenants, and in good faith, I am sure, that no hearings had been held on this.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I am sure.

Mr. YATES. Let me get this clear. It was represented to me, upon my calling the office of one of the members of the gentleman's committee, that tenants who now occupy homes under section 8 would not be disturbed for 2 years but, after 2 years, they would be required to leave their apartments.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Let me disabuse my colleague on that score. They would not.

Let me add further, the HUD place between a hard rock and a hard place is that in the meanwhile these very dwellings will be deteriorating to such a point that they will be substandard, if they are not already, unless we refine the act. However, should there be any problem as HUD goes into this program, remember, we are still working on the extension of all of the authorization legislation on affordable housing, including this. We have got to extend every one of these bills before the end of this fiscal year.

That is what we are involved in now, to the exclusion of almost everything else.

So the gentleman can rest assured that in a dispassionate and calm fashion, the gentleman and I will be able to look this over and, if corrections are needed, by golly, we will place them in the authorization.

Mr. YATES. So the chairman is making a statement that the information that I had received that section 8 tenants would be required to leave their section 8 homes at the end of 2 years under this legislation is not correct.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, it is not correct. Let me repeat.

Mr. YATES. They will not be, under this legislation, there is no provision that will require them to leave their homes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. That is correct. That is right.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add the point, I agree with the explanation that the chairman has given, but I might also observe that the chairman has correctly pointed out that we have to look to the future of section 8 subsidies and how we can improve that program and enlarge it in the future. But as long as we are dealing with this terrible drain on the Treasury and on HUD's funds, they continue to drain funding and that serves no useful purpose. It brings no rewards or awards for low-income people or anyone else. And certainly it disadvantages the taxpayer. As long as we are continuing this present system, it will continue to inhibit us and hobble us for dealing with an expansion of section 8 subsidies in the future.

I want to clear this, legislation does not affect the existing section 8 subsidies. Under this program, they will continue.

Mr. YATES. Inasmuch as I have the time, I would say to the gentlewoman, I recognize it as having a very substantial effect upon the problems of the Treasury and of housing. It is a drain. But these people have no place else to live.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, they will stay in their subsidized apartments. They will not be evicted. They will maintain their section 8 subsidies, and they will continue the assistance under this program.

Mr. YATES. I see. And will there be a diminution of section 8 subsidies in the future under this legislation?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, the chairman has spoken to this question. We hope not. We are trying to find a way out of this dilemma.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will there be a lessening of the amount of section 8 housing that will be available under any of the provisions of this bill?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, it is not now nor is it contemplated there would be. Rather, we would like to see some enhancement in the use of section 8.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his explanation. I will be meeting with people who visited me this morning later in the day. I want the opportunity to discuss with them at that time and to provide the assurances I have received from the chairman and from the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

I may ask for a rollcall vote as a result, in order to do that, if the gentleman has no great objection to that. I am sure he does not, in view of his views on the legislation.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is a free agent here, a Member. I hope he does meet with the folks he has described and explain to them the thrust of this legislation.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the leadership of the Banking Committee for including in this legislation my bill, the Community Enterprise Revitalization Amendments Act of 1994. This bill, H.R. 3793, makes changes to HUD's Section 108 Loan Guarantee Program to increase further the flexibility this program will offer to cities and counties.

Section 108 has been an interest of mine for some years now. What the program does is allow those eligible for CDGB funding to receive HUD-guaranteed loans for projects that could not tap directly into a CDBG grant. What makes the program work is that should the loan repayment not stay current, the locality's future CDBG moneys are turned back to HUD to cover the loan. Not only does this protect the taxpayer, but it forces local governments and project sponsors to work together to identify all means of making the loan good, so as not to lose the CDBG revenue stream. To date there have not been any defaults on section 108 guarantees.

Notably, section 108 guarantee authority remains woefully underused. Partly this is due to a lack of information, but partly it is due to the fact that we need to make the program more flexible for small cities such as my home of Erie. What my bill does is allow localities to turn back to HUD unused urban development action grant [UDAG] funds, many of which are too small to leverage projects by themselves, so that a portion of the old UDAG grants can be used to enhance the security of a new section 108 loan. This change will put limited dollars to work more efficiently.

The bill also allows section 108 loan guarantees to back public facilities such as day care and Head Start, which will help meet expanding demand in this sector. In particular, many distressed communities need day care so parents can get up and go to work instead of waiting at home for a welfare check. We're only helping people to help themselves, in other words.

Finally, the bill allows HUD to make changes in the financial markets so section 108 loans will be more attractive to investors. This authority is common to other housing and economic development programs already in place in HUD and quasi-public agencies.

Mr. Speaker, I support this bipartisan housing bill, and look forward to implementing the section 108 changes and the other programs in H.R. 4067.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4067, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The point of order of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

MARINE MAMMAL PROTECTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1994

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2760) to authorize the Marine Mammal Protection Act for a period of 6 years, to establish a new regime to govern the incidental taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 2760

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 2. AMENDMENT OF MARINE MAMMAL PROTECTION ACT OF 1972.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1361 et seq.).

SEC. 3. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

Section 2 (16 U.S.C. 1361) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) by inserting "essential habitats, including" after "made to protect"; and

(2) in paragraph (5) in the matter following subparagraph (B) by inserting "and their habitats" before "is therefore necessary".

SEC. 4. MORATORIUM AND EXCEPTIONS.

(1) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) Consistent with the provisions of section 104, permits may be issued by the Secretary for taking, and importation for purposes of scientific research, public display, photography for educational or commercial purposes, or enhancing the survival or recovery of a species or stock, or for importation of polar bear parts (other than internal organs) taken in sport hunts in Canada. Such permits, except permits issued under section 104(c)(5), may be issued if the taking or importation proposed to be made is first reviewed by the Marine Mammal Commission and the Committee of Scientific Advisors on Marine Mammals established under title II. The Commission and Committee shall recommend any proposed taking or importation, other than importation under section 104(c)(5), which is consistent with the purposes and policies of section 2 of this Act. If the Secretary issues such a permit for importation, the Secretary shall issue to the importer concerned a certificate to that effect in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury prescribes, and such importation may be made upon presentation of the certificate to the customs officer concerned.";

(2) in paragraph (2) in the first sentence by striking "and permits may" and all that follows through "section 103." and inserting "and authorizations may be granted therefor under section 118 subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary.";

(3) in paragraph (3)(B)—

(A) by inserting ", photography for educational or commercial purposes," after "purposes"; and

(B) by inserting "or as provided for under paragraph (5) of this subsection," after "subsection,";

(4) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

"(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), the provisions of this Act shall not apply to the use of measures—

"(i) by the owner of fishing gear or catch, or an employee or agent of such owner, to deter a marine mammal from damaging the gear or catch;

"(ii) by the owner of other private property, or an agent, bailee, or employee of such owner, to deter a marine mammal from damaging private property;

"(iii) by any person, to deter a marine mammal from endangering personal safety; or

"(iv) by a government employee, to deter a marine mammal from damaging public property, so long as such measures do not result in the death or serious injury of a marine mammal.

"(B) The Secretary shall, through consultation with appropriate experts, and after notice and opportunity for public comment, publish in the Federal Register a list of guidelines for use in safely deterring marine mammals. In the case of marine mammals listed as endangered species or threatened species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973, the Secretary shall recommend specific measures which may be used to nonlethally deter marine mammals. Actions to deter marine mammals consistent with such guidelines shall not be a violation of this Act.

"(C) If the Secretary determines, using the best scientific information available, that certain forms of deterrence have a significant adverse effect on marine mammals, the Secretary may prohibit such deterrent methods, after notice and opportunity for public comment, through regulation under this Act.

"(D) The authority to deter marine mammals pursuant to subparagraph (A) applies to all marine mammals, including all stocks designated as depleted under this Act.".

(5) in paragraph (5)(A) by inserting ", other than by harassment," after "taking" the first place it appears;

(6) in paragraph (5) by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

"(D)(i) Upon request therefor by citizens of the United States who engage in a specified activity (other than commercial fishing) within a specific geographic region, the Secretary shall authorize, for periods of not more than 1 year, subject to such conditions as the Secretary may specify, the incidental, but not intentional, taking by harassment of small numbers of marine mammals of a species or population stock by such citizens while engaging in that activity within that region if the Secretary finds that such harassment during each period concerned—

"(I) will have a negligible impact on such species or stock, and

"(II) will not have an unmitigable adverse impact on the availability of such species or stock for taking for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b), or section 109(f) or 119.

"(ii) The authorization for such activity shall prescribe, where applicable—

"(I) permissible methods of taking pursuant to such activity, and other means of effecting the least practicable impact on such species or stock and its habitat, paying particular attention to rookeries, mating grounds, and areas of similar significance, and on the availability of such species or stock for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b) or section 109(f) or 119,

"(II) the measures that the Secretary determines are necessary to ensure no unmitigable adverse impact on the availability of the species or stock for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b) or section 109(f) or 119, and

"(III) requirements pertaining to the monitoring and reporting of such taking, including requirements for the independent peer review of proposed monitoring plans or other research proposals where the proposed activity may affect the availability of a species or stock for taking for subsistence uses pursuant to subsection (b) or section 109(f) or 119.

"(iii) The Secretary shall publish a proposed authorization not later than 45 days after receiving an application under this subparagraph and request public comment through notice in the Federal Register, newspapers of general circulation, and appropriate electronic media and to all locally affected communities for a period of 30 days after publication. Not later than 45 days after the close of the public comment period, if the Secretary makes the findings set forth in clause (i), the Secretary shall issue an authorization with appropriate conditions to meet the requirements of clause (ii).

"(iv) The Secretary may annually renew an authorization issued under this subparagraph after providing for 30 days of public comment and consulting with the parties affected by the authorization, if the Secretary finds that the requirements of clause (i) continue to be met.

"(v) The Secretary shall establish additional conditions or restrictions on an authorization renewed under clause (iv) if the Secretary finds, based on public comment, that such conditions or restrictions are necessary to meet the provisions of clause (ii).

"(vi) The Secretary shall modify, suspend, or revoke an authorization if the Secretary finds that the provisions of clauses (i) or (ii) are not being met.

"(vii) A person conducting an activity for which an authorization has been granted under this subparagraph shall not be subject to the penalties of this Act for taking by harassment that occurs in compliance with such authorization.

"(E) The Secretary may issue a permit under this paragraph for periods of up to 3 years for the incidental, but not the intentional, taking by persons using vessels of the United States and vessels which have valid fishing permits issued by the Secretary in accordance with section 204(b) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1824(b)), while engaging in commercial fishing operations, of small numbers of marine mammals from a species or population stock that is listed as an endangered species or threatened species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973. Such permit may be issued only if the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for public comment, that—

"(i) such taking will have a negligible impact on the species or stock;

"(ii) a program is in place which will allow reliable estimation and monitoring of the level of incidental take; and

"(iii) a recovery plan has been developed or is in the process of being developed for the species or stock pursuant to the Endangered Species Act of 1973. A permit may be issued under this subparagraph to an organization representing more than 1 individual or fishing vessel.

"(F) If the Secretary determines that the issuance of a permit under this paragraph for a species or stock has resulted or is likely to result in levels of incidental takes which will have an impact that is more than negligible on the species or stock, the Secretary shall modify, suspend, or revoke the permit. In making a determination under this subparagraph, the Secretary shall consider the level of incidental takes by each permit holder in a fishery and whether a permit holder has failed to comply with the terms and conditions of the permit. The Secretary shall notify the permit holder before modifying, suspending, or revoking a permit.

"(G) The Secretary shall prescribe such procedures as are necessary to carry out this paragraph, including the form and manner in which application for permits may be made.

"(H) This paragraph shall not govern the incidental taking of California sea otters and shall not be deemed to amend or repeal the Act of November 7, 1986 (Public Law 99-625; 100 Stat. 3500).".

(7) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6)(A) A marine mammal product may be imported into the United States if the product—

"(i) was legally possessed and exported by any citizen of the United States in conjunction with travel outside the United States, provided that the product is imported into the United States by the same person upon the termination of travel and is registered at the time of export and import;

"(ii) was acquired outside of the United States as part of a cultural exchange by an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska, and is registered at the time of import; or

"(iii) is owned by a Native inhabitant of Russia, Canada, or Greenland and is imported in conjunction with travel within the United States or as part of a cultural exchange with an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska.

"(B) For the purposes of this paragraph, the term—

"(i) 'Native inhabitant of Russia, Canada, or Greenland' means a person residing in Russia, Canada, or Greenland who is related by blood to, is a member of the same clan or ethnological grouping as, or shares a common heritage with, an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska; and

"(ii) 'cultural exchange' means the sharing or exchange of ideas, information, gifts, clothing, or handicrafts between an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo residing in Alaska and a Native inhabitant of Russia, Canada, or Greenland, including for the purpose of rendering of raw marine mammal parts into clothing or handicrafts through carving, painting, sewing, or decorating but does not include an exchange for commercial purposes.

"(C) Raw marine mammal parts imported under subparagraph (A)(ii) or (iii) shall be marked or tagged under the requirements of section 109(i).".

(b) Section 101(c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) It shall not be a violation of this Act to take a marine mammal if such taking is imminently necessary in self-defense or to save the life of a person in immediate danger, and such taking is reported to the Secretary within 48 hours.".

SEC. 5. DEPLETION DETERMINATION.

Section 101(b) (16 U.S.C. 1371) is amended by adding the following at the end: "Before making a determination under this subsection that a species or stock of marine mammal is depleted, the Secretary shall identify and make available to the public the reasons for making a determination and provide opportunity, at the request of any interested party, for a hearing on the record with respect to the determination.".

SEC. 6. PERMITS.

(a) PROHIBITIONS.—Section 102(a) (16 U.S.C. 1372(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)(B) by striking "for any purpose in any way connected with the taking or importation of" and inserting "to take or import"; and

(2) in paragraph (4) by—

(A) striking "or offer to purchase or sell" and inserting "export, or offer to purchase, sell, or export";

(B) striking "product; and" and inserting "product—"; and

(C) inserting after and below the text of the paragraph the following:

"(A) that is taken in violation of this Act; or

"(B) for any purpose other than public display, scientific research, or enhancing the survival of a species or stock as provided for under subsection 104(c); and".

(b) PERMITS.—Section 104 (16 U.S.C. 1374) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by inserting "except for the incidental taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations" before the period at the end;

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) in paragraph (1) in the first sentence by striking "and after";

(B) by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"(2)(A) A permit may be issued to take or import a marine mammal for the purpose of public display only to a person which the Secretary determines—

"(i) offers a program for education or conservation purposes that is based on professionally recognized standards of the public display community;

"(ii) is registered or holds a license issued under 7 U.S.C. 2131; and

"(iii) maintains facilities for the public display of marine mammals that are open to the public on a regularly scheduled basis and that access to such facilities is not limited or restricted other than by charging of an admission fee.

"(B) A permit under this paragraph shall grant to the person to which it is issued the right, without obtaining any additional permit or authorization under this Act, to—

"(i) take, import, purchase, offer to purchase, possess, or transport the marine mammal that is the subject of the permit; and

"(ii) sell, export, or otherwise transfer possession of the marine mammal, or offer to sell, export, or otherwise transfer possession of the marine mammal—

"(I) for the purpose of public display, to a person that meets the requirements of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (A);

"(II) for the purpose of scientific research, to a person that meets the requirements of paragraph (3); or

"(III) for the purpose of enhancing the survival or recovery of a species or stock, to a person that meets the requirements of paragraph (4).

"(C) A person to which a marine mammal is sold or exported or to which possession of a marine mammal is otherwise transferred under the authority of subparagraph (B) shall have the rights and responsibilities described in subparagraph (B) with respect to the marine mammal without obtaining any additional permit or authorization under this Act. Such responsibilities shall be limited to—

"(i) for the purpose of public display, the responsibility to meet the requirements of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (A),

"(ii) for the purpose of scientific research, the responsibility to meet the requirements of paragraph (3), and

"(iii) for the purpose of enhancing the survival or recovery of a species or stock, the responsibility to meet the requirements of paragraph (4).

"(D) If the Secretary—

"(i) finds in concurrence with the Secretary of Agriculture, that a person that holds a permit

under this paragraph for a marine mammal, or a person exercising rights under subparagraph (C), no longer meets the requirements of subparagraph (A)(ii) and is not reasonably likely to meet those requirements in the near future, or

"(ii) finds that a person that holds a permit under this paragraph for a marine mammal, or a person exercising rights under subparagraph (C), no longer meets the requirements of subparagraph (A)(i) or (iii) and is not reasonably likely to meet those requirements in the near future, the Secretary may revoke the permit in accordance with section 104(e), seize the marine mammal, or cooperate with other persons authorized to hold marine mammals under this Act for disposition of the marine mammal. The Secretary may recover from the person expenses incurred by the Secretary for that seizure.

"(E) No marine mammal held pursuant to a permit issued under subparagraph (A), or by a person exercising rights under subparagraph (C), may be sold, purchased, exported, or transported unless the Secretary is notified of such action no later than 15 days before such action, and such action is for purposes of public display, scientific research, or enhancing the survival or recovery of a species or stock. The Secretary may only require the notification to include the information required for the inventory established under paragraph (10).";

(C) by amending paragraph (3) to read as follows:

"(3)(A) The Secretary may issue a permit under this paragraph for scientific research purposes that may result in a taking of a marine mammal to an applicant which submits with its permit application information indicating that the taking is required to further a bona fide scientific purpose. The Secretary may issue a permit under this paragraph before the end of the public review and comment period required under subsection (d)(2) if delaying issuance of the permit could result in harm to a species, population, or individual, or in loss of unique research opportunities.

"(B) No permit issued for purposes of scientific research shall authorize the lethal taking of a marine mammal unless the applicant demonstrates that a nonlethal method of conducting the research is not feasible. The Secretary shall not issue a permit for research which involves the lethal taking of a marine mammal from a species or stock that is depleted, unless the Secretary determines that the results of such research will directly benefit that species or stock, or that such research fulfills a critically important research need.

"(C) Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of the Marine Mammal Protection Act Amendments of 1994, the Secretary shall issue a general authorization and implementing regulations allowing bona fide scientific research that may result only in taking by Level B harassment of a marine mammal. Such authorization shall apply to persons which submit, by 60 days before commencement of such research, a letter of intent via certified mail to the Secretary containing the following:

"(i) The species or stocks of marine mammals which may be harassed.

"(ii) Geographic location of the research.

"(iii) The period of time over which the research will be conducted.

"(iv) The purpose of the research, including a description of how the definition of bona fide research as established under this Act would apply.

"(v) Methods to be used to conduct the research.

Not later than 30 days after receipt of a letter of intent to conduct scientific research under the general authorization, the Secretary may notify the applicant that the proposed research is likely to result in the taking, including Level A harassment, of a marine mammal, and that subparagraph (A) applies. If no such notification is received, the proposed research shall be covered under the general authorization."; and

(D) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(5)(A) The Secretary may issue a permit for the importation of polar bear parts (other than internal organs) taken in sport hunts in Canada, including polar bears taken prior to the date of enactment of the Marine Mammal Protection Act Amendments of 1994, to an applicant which submits with its permit application proof that the polar bear was legally harvested in Canada. Such a permit shall be issued if the Secretary, in consultation with the Marine Mammal Commission and after notice and opportunity for public comment, finds that—

"(i) Canada has a monitored and enforced sport hunting program consistent with the purposes of the Agreement on the Conservation of Polar Bears;

"(ii) Canada has a sport hunting program based on scientifically sound quotas ensuring sustainable populations;

"(iii) the export and subsequent import are consistent with the provisions of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora and other international agreements and conventions; and

"(iv) the export and subsequent import are not likely to contribute to illegal trade in bear parts.

"(B) The Secretary shall establish and charge a reasonable fee for permits issued under this paragraph. "(a) In General.—

"(1) Effective on the date of enactment of the Marine Mammal Protection Act Amendments of 1994 and except as provided in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), the provisions of this section shall govern the incidental taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations by persons using vessels of the United States and vessels which have valid fishing permits issued by the Secretary in accordance with section 204(b) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1824(b)). It shall be the immediate goal that the incidental kill or serious injury of marine mammals permitted in the course of commercial fishing operations be reduced to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate within 5 years after the date of enactment of the Marine Mammal Protection Act Amendments of 1994.

"(2) Section 101 and not this section shall govern the incidental taking of a marine mammal listed as an endangered species or threatened species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973.

"(3) Section 104(h) and title III and not this section shall govern the taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial purse seine fishing for yellowfin tuna in the eastern tropical Pacific Ocean.

"(4) This section shall not govern the incidental taking of California sea otters and shall not be deemed to amend or repeal the Act of November 7, 1986 (Public Law 99-625; 100 Stat. 3500).

"(b) Scientific Consultation.—

"(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of the Marine Mammal Protection Act Amendments of 1994, the Secretary shall, in consultation with the Marine Mammal Commission, establish independent scientific review groups representing Alaska, the Pacific coast (including Hawaii), the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic coast consisting of individuals with expertise in marine mammal biology and ecology, population dynamics and modeling, and commercial fishing technology and practices, and representatives of coastal States, for the purposes of reviewing proposed actions under this section. The groups shall advise the Secretary on—

"(A) population estimates for those marine mammal stocks taken incidental to commercial fishing operations;

"(F) the potential impacts of habitat destruction, including marine pollution and natural environmental change, on specific marine mammal species or stocks; and

"(G) any other issue which the Secretary or the groups consider appropriate.

"(2) The scientific review groups established under this subsection shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 App. U.S.C.).

"(c) Stock Assessments and Determinations of Strategic Stocks.—

"(1) Not later than 60 days after the establishment of the scientific review groups under subsection (b), the Secretary shall, in consultation with the scientific review groups, prepare proposed stock assessments of each marine mammal stock which occurs in waters under the jurisdiction of the United States and which is taken incidental to commercial fishing operations, and shall publish notice of its availability in the Federal Register for public review and comment for a period which shall not exceed 60 days. Each proposed stock assessment shall include—

"(A) the area in which each stock is located and, if migratory, the season of its location in that area;

"(B) the best available estimates of minimum population size, most likely population size, stock separation, productivity, current population trend, and estimated optimum sustainable population range if available;

"(C) estimates of total lethal and serious injury take from each stock by source and, for depleted stocks, other factors that may cause the further decline or impede the recovery of that stock, including impacts on marine mammal habitat and prey;

"(D) a description of the commercial fisheries that may incur incidental lethal and serious injury takes from each stock, including—

"(i) the approximate number of vessels actively participating in each fishery;

"(ii) the best available estimates of incidental lethal and serious injury take from the stock by each fishery on an annual basis;

"(iii) seasonal or area differences in levels of such take; and

"(3) The Secretary shall review stock assessments in accordance with this subsection—

"(A) at least annually for stocks which are—

"(i) specified as strategic stocks in a final stock assessment under this subsection;

"(ii) listed as a threatened species or endangered species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.);

"(B) at least annually for stocks for which significant new information is available; and

"(C) at least once every 3 years for all other stocks.

"(4) Nothing in this subsection shall prevent the Secretary from publishing stock assessments for strategic stocks in an expedited fashion.

"(d) Authorization To Take Marine Mammals.—

"(1) Not later than 30 days after the date of the publication of the final stock assessments under subsection (c), or September 1, 1995, whichever is earlier, the Secretary shall issue a general authorization and implementing regulations allowing incidental, but not intentional, taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations subject to the provisions of this section. The implementing regulations shall identify the fisheries in which vessels shall be considered to be operating under the general authorization and shall establish additional permit requirements for fisheries that are not so identified under the general authorization.

"(2) The Secretary shall, within 90 days after the date of enactment of this section—

"(A) publish in the Federal Register for public comment, for a period of not less than 90 days, any necessary changes to the Secretary's list of commercial fisheries published under section 114(b)(1) and which is in existence on March 31, 1994 (along with an explanation of such changes and a statement of the marine mammals and the approximate number of vessels or persons actively involved in each such fishery), that have—

"(i) frequent incidental taking of marine mammals;

"(ii) occasional incidental taking of marine mammals; or

"(iii) a remote likelihood of or no known incidental taking of marine mammals;

"(B) after the close of the period for such public comment, publish in the Federal Register a revised list of commercial fisheries and an update of information required by subparagraph (A), together with a summary of the provisions of this section and information sufficient to advise vessel owners on how to obtain an authorization and otherwise comply with the requirements of this section; and

"(C) at least once each year thereafter, and at such other times as the Secretary considers appropriate, reexamine, based on information gathered under this Act and other relevant sources and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the classification of commercial fisheries and other determinations required under subparagraph (A) and publish in the Federal Register any necessary changes.

"(3)(A) An authorization shall be granted by the Secretary in accordance with this section for a vessel engaged in a commercial fishery listed under paragraph (2)(A)(i) or (ii), upon receipt by the Secretary of a completed registration form providing the name of the vessel owner and operator, the name and description of the vessel, the fisheries in which it will be engaged, the approximate time, duration, and location of such fishery operations, and the general type and nature of use of the fishing gear and techniques used. Such information shall be in a readily usable format that can be efficiently entered into and utilized by an automated or computerized data processing system. A decal or other physical evidence that the authorization is current and valid shall be issued by the Secretary at the time an authorization is granted, and so long as the authorization remains current and valid, shall be reissued annually thereafter.

"(B) No authorization may be granted under this section to the owner of a vessel unless such vessel—

"(i) is a vessel of the United States; or

"(ii) has a valid fishing permit issued by the Secretary in accordance with section 204(b) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1824(b)).

"(C) Except as provided in subsection (a), an authorization granted under this section shall allow the incidental taking of all species and stocks of marine mammals to which this Act applies.

"(4)(A) An owner of a vessel engaged in any fishery listed under paragraph (2)(A)(i) or (ii) shall, in order to engage in the lawful incidental taking of marine mammals in a commercial fishery—

"(i) have registered as required under paragraph (3) with the Secretary in order to obtain for each such vessel owned and used in the fishery an authorization for the purpose of incidentally taking marine mammals in accordance with this section, except that owners of vessels holding valid certificates of exemption under section 114 are deemed to have registered for purposes of this subsection for the period during which such registration is valid;

"(ii) ensure that a decal or such other physical evidence of a current and valid authorization as the Secretary may require is displayed on or is in the possession of the master of each such vessel;

"(iii) report as required by subsection (h); and

"(iv) comply with a take reduction plan and emergency regulations issued under this section.

"(B) Any owner of a vessel receiving an authorization under this section for any fishery listed under paragraph (2)(A)(i) or (ii) shall, as a condition of that authorization, take on board an observer if requested to do so by the Secretary.

"(C) An owner of a vessel engaged in a fishery listed under paragraph (2)(A)(i) or (ii) who—

"(i) fails to obtain from the Secretary an authorization for such vessel under this section;

"(ii) fails to maintain a current and valid authorization for such vessel; or

"(iii) fails to ensure that a decal or other physical evidence of such authorization issued by the Secretary is displayed on or is in possession of the master of the vessel, and the master of any such vessel engaged in such fishery, shall be deemed to have violated this title, and for violations of clauses (i) and (ii) shall be subject to the penalties of this title, and for violations of clause (iii) shall be subject to a fine of not more than $100 for each offense.

"(D) If the owner of a vessel has obtained and maintains a current and valid authorization from the Secretary under this section and meets the requirements set forth in this section, including compliance with any regulations to implement a take reduction plan under this section, the owner of such vessel, and the master and crew members of the vessel, shall not be subject to the penalties set forth in this title for the incidental taking of marine mammals while such vessel is engaged in a fishery to which the authorization applies.

"(E) Each owner of a vessel engaged in any fishery not listed under paragraph (2)(A)(i) or (ii), and the master and crew members of such a vessel, shall not be subject to the penalties set forth in this title for the incidental taking of marine mammals if such owner reports to the Secretary, in the form and manner required under subsection (h), instances of incidental mortality or injury of marine mammals in the course of that fishery.

"(5) The Secretary shall suspend or revoke an authorization granted under this section and shall not issue a decal or other physical evidence of the authorization for any vessel until the owner of such vessel complies with the reporting requirements under subsection (h) and such requirements to take on board an observer under paragraph (4)(B) as are applicable to such vessel. Previous failure to comply with the requirements of section 114 shall not bar authorization under this section for an owner who complies with the requirements of this section. The Secretary may suspend or revoke an authorization granted under this subsection, and may not issue a decal or other physical evidence of the authorization for any vessel which fails to comply with a take reduction plan or emergency regulations issued under this section.

"(6)(A) The Secretary shall develop, in consultation with the appropriate States, affected Regional Fishery Management Councils, and other interested persons, the means by which the granting and administration of authorizations under this section shall be integrated and coordinated, to the maximum extent practicable, with existing fishery licenses, registrations, and related programs.

"(B) The Secretary shall utilize newspapers of general circulation, fishery trade associations, electronic media, and other means of advising commercial fishermen of the provisions of this section and the means by which they can comply with its requirements.

"(C) The Secretary is authorized to charge a fee for the granting of an authorization under this section. The level of fees charged under this subparagraph shall not exceed the administrative costs incurred in granting an authorization. Fees collected under this subparagraph shall be available to the Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere for expenses incurred in the granting and administration of authorizations under this section.

"(e) TAKE REDUCTION TEAMS.—

"(1) No later than 30 days after the publication of a final stock assessment under subsection (c), the Secretary shall establish take reduction teams for those marine mammal species or stocks which are specified as strategic stocks in final stock assessments under subsection (c) and publish notice of that establishment in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall establish take reduction teams for stocks which are not specified as strategic stocks in final stock assessments under subsection (c), as the Secretary considers necessary in accordance with subsection (f).

"(2) The Secretary may request a take reduction team to consider and provide advice on measures necessary to reduce incidental lethal takes from a marine mammal stock whose range extends over more than 1 region, or on multiple marine mammal stocks within a region.

"(3) Members of take reduction teams shall have expertise regarding the conservation or biology of the marine mammal species which the incidental take plan will address, or the fishing practices involved in the incidental lethal taking of such species. Members shall include representatives of Federal agencies, each coastal State which has fisheries which interact with the species or stock, appropriate Regional Fishery Management Councils, interstate fisheries commissions, academic and scientific organizations, environmental groups, all commercial and recreational fisheries groups and gear types which incidentally take the species or stock, Alaska Native organizations or Indian tribal organizations, and others as the Secretary deems appropriate. Take reduction teams shall, to the maximum extent practicable, consist of an equitable balance among representatives of resource user interests and nonuser interests.

"(4) Take reduction teams shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 App. U.S.C.). Meetings of take reduction teams shall be open to the public, and prior notice of meetings shall be made public in a timely fashion.

"(5) Members of take reduction teams shall serve without compensation. Members of take reduction teams who are not Federal or State government employees shall be reimbursed by the Secretary, upon request, for reasonable travel costs and expenses incurred in performing their obligations.

"(f) TAKE REDUCTION PLANS.—

"(1) The Secretary shall issue take reduction plans for marine mammal stocks in accordance with this subsection. The immediate goal of a take reduction plan shall be reduce, within 1 year of its implementation, the lethal take or serious injury of marine mammals incidentally taken in the course of commercial fishing operations to levels less than the potential biological removal level established in this section. The long-term goal of the plan shall be to reduce, within 5 years of its implementation, the lethal take or serious injury of marine mammals incidentally taken in the course of commercial fishing operations to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate, taking into account the economics of the fishery, the availability of existing technology, and existing State or regional fishery management plans.

"(2) 2 years after the issuance of the general authorization under subsection (d), the Secretary shall review the progress, by fishery, toward reducing incidental lethal takes and serious injury of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate. The Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives a report setting forth the results of such review within 1 year after commencement of the review.

"(3) The Secretary shall give priority to the development of take reduction plans for marine mammal stocks or species—

"(A) which are specified as strategic stocks and which are incidentally taken in fisheries listed under subsection (d)(2)(A)(i);

"(B) which are specified as strategic stocks and which are incidentally taken in fisheries listed under subsection (d)(2)(A)(ii); and

"(C) which are not specified as strategic stocks but which the Secretary finds are approaching strategic stock status.

"(4) Each take reduction plan shall include—

"(A) a review of the information in the final stock assessment published under subsection (c) and any new information;

"(B) an estimate of the total number and, if possible, age and gender, of animals from the stock that are being incidentally lethally taken each year during the course of commercial fishing operations, by fishery;

"(C) recommended regulatory or voluntary measures for the reduction of incidental lethal takes; and

"(D) recommended dates for achieving the specific objectives of the plan.

"(5) Recommended take reduction plans developed by a take reduction team under this subsection for submission to the Secretary shall be developed by consensus. In the event that a consensus cannot be reached, the team shall advise the Secretary on the range of possibilities considered by the team, and the views of both the majority and the minority. The Secretary shall then propose a take reduction plan consistent with the provisions of this subsection.

"(6) In the case of those marine mammal species or stocks which are specified as strategic stocks in final stock assessments under subsection (c), the following provisions apply:

"(A) Not later than 6 months after the date of establishment of a take reduction team for that stock, the take reduction team shall recommend a take reduction plan to the Secretary, consistent with the other provisions of this subsection.

"(E) The Secretary and the take reduction team shall meet every 6 months to monitor the implementation of the take reduction plan until such time as the Secretary determines that meetings are no longer necessary.

"(7) In the case of those marine mammal species or stocks which are not specified as strategic stocks in final stock assessments under subsection (c), the following provisions apply:

"(A) Within 11 months after the establishment of the take reduction team, the team shall recommend a take reduction plan for that stock to the Secretary, consistent with the other provisions of this subsection.

"(B) The Secretary shall consider the recommended take reduction plan and, not later than 60 days after the submission of the recommended take reduction plan, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the recommended take reduction plan, any changes proposed by the Secretary along with the reason for the proposed changes, and proposed implementing regulations for public review and comment.

"(C) If the take reduction team does not recommend a take reduction plan to the Secretary within 11 months, the Secretary shall, not later than 13 months after the establishment of the take reduction team, publish in the Federal Register a proposed take reduction plan and implementing regulations for public review and comment.

"(D) Not later than 60 days after the close of the comment period required under this paragraph, the Secretary shall issue a final take reduction plan and implementing regulations, consistent with the other provisions of this subsection. If the Secretary rejects or significantly modifies a plan recommended under subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall notify the take reduction team and specify in writing the reasons for the rejection or modification.

"(E) The Secretary and the take reduction team shall meet on an annual basis to monitor the implementation of the take reduction plan until such time as the Secretary determines that meetings are no longer necessary.

"(8) If a take reduction plan does not achieve its immediate goal of reducing incidental lethal takes in the course of commercial fishing operations to levels less than the potential biological removal level within 1 year, or its long-term goal of reducing incidental lethal takes in the course of commercial fishing operations to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate within 5 years, the Secretary shall, in consultation with the take reduction team, amend the take reduction plan and implementing regulations as necessary to achieve the goal, consistent with the procedures in this subsection for the issuance of such plans and regulations.

"(9) In implementing a take reduction plan issued pursuant to this subsection, the Secretary may promulgate regulations which include measures which—

"(A) establish fishery-specific limits on incidental lethal takes;

"(B) restrict commercial fisheries by time or area;

"(C) require the use of alternative gear techniques or technology, and encourage the development of such gear or technology;

"(D) educate commercial fishermen and others on the importance and means of reducing incidental lethal takes of marine mammals; and

"(E) in promulgating such regulations, the Secretary shall conform such regulations, to the maximum extent practicable, with State or regional fishery management plans.

"(10) If the Secretary finds that a significant level of incidental lethal taking of a marine mammal stock is occurring within a fishery within the jurisdiction of a State, the Secretary and take reduction team shall consult with State fishery managers to develop a take reduction plan for that fishery.

"(g) EMERGENCY REGULATIONS.—(1) If the Secretary finds that the incidental lethal take and serious injury of marine mammals from commercial fisheries is having, or is likely to have, an immediate and significant adverse impact on a stock or species, the Secretary shall take actions as follows:

"(A) In the case of a stock or species for which a take reduction plan is in effect, the Secretary shall—

"(i) prescribe emergency regulations that, consistent with such plan to the maximum extent practicable, reduce incidental lethal take and serious injury in that fishery; and

"(ii) approve and implement, on an expedited basis, any amendments to such plan that are recommended by the take reduction team to address such adverse impact.

"(B) In the case of a stock or species for which a take reduction plan is being developed, the Secretary shall—

"(i) prescribe emergency regulations to reduce such incidental lethal take and serious injury in that fishery; and

"(ii) approve and implement, on an expedited basis, such plan, which shall provide methods to address such adverse impact if still necessary.

"(C) In the case of a stock or species for which a take reduction plan does not exist and is not being developed, or in the case of a commercial fishery listed under subsection (d)(1)(A)(iii) which the Secretary believes may be contributing to such adverse impact, the Secretary shall—

"(i) prescribe emergency regulations to reduce such incidental lethal take and serious injury in that fishery, to the extent necessary to mitigate such adverse impact;

"(ii) immediately review the stock assessment for such stock or species and the classification of such commercial fishery under this section to determine if a take reduction team should be established; and

"(iii) may, where necessary to address such adverse impact, place observers on vessels in a commercial fishery listed under subsection (d)(2)(A)(iii), if the Secretary has reason to believe such vessels may be causing the incidental lethal take and serious injury to marine mammals from such stock and the vessel owner agrees to take an observer on board.

"(2) Prior to taking action under paragraph (1)(A), (B), or (C), the Secretary shall consult with the Marine Mammal Commission, all appropriate Regional Fishery Management Councils, State fishery managers, and the appropriate take reduction team (if established).

"(3) Emergency regulations prescribed under this subsection—

"(A) shall be published in the Federal Register, together with an explanation thereof;

"(B) shall remain in effect for not more than 180 days or until the end of the applicable commercial fishing season, whichever is earlier; and

"(C) may be terminated by the Secretary at an earlier date by publication in the Federal Register of a notice of termination, if the Secretary determines that the reasons for emergency regulations no longer exist.

"(h) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—The owner or operator of a commercial fishing vessel subject to this Act shall report all incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations to the Secretary by mail or other means acceptable to the Secretary within 48 hours after the end of each fishing trip on a standard form to be developed by the Secretary under this section. Such form shall be readily usable by an automated or computerized data processing system and shall require the vessel owner or operator to provide the following:

"(1) The vessel name, and Federal, State, or tribal registration numbers of the registered vessel.

"(2) The name and address of the vessel owner or operator.

"(3) The name and description of the fishery.

commercial fishing operations. The purposes of the monitoring program shall be to—

"(A) obtain statistically reliable estimates of incidental lethal takes and serious injury;

"(B) determine the reliability of reports of incidental lethal takes and serious injury under subsection (h); and

"(C) identify changes in fishing methods or technology that may increase or decrease incidental lethal takes.

"(2) Pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary may place observers on board vessels as necessary, subject to the provisions of this section. Observers may, among other tasks—

"(A) record incidental mortality or by-catch of other nontarget species;

"(B) record numbers of marine mammals sighted; and

"(C) perform other scientific investigations.

"(3) In determining the distribution of observers among fisheries and vessels within a fishery, the Secretary shall be guided by the following standards:

"(A) The requirement to obtain statistically reliable information.

"(B) The requirement that assignment of observers is fair and equitable among fisheries and among vessels in a fishery.

"(C) The requirement that no individual person or vessel, or group of persons or vessels, be subject to excessive or overly burdensome observer coverage.

"(D) To the extent practicable, the need to minimize costs and avoid duplication.

"(4) To the extent practicable, the Secretary shall allocate observers among fisheries consistent with the following priorities:

"(A) First, fisheries that incidentally lethally take or seriously injure marine mammals from stocks that are depleted because of their listing as an endangered species or threatened species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973.

"(B) Second, fisheries that incidentally lethally take or seriously injure marine mammals from stocks which are specified as strategic stocks in final stock assessments under subsection (c).

"(C) Third, fisheries that incidentally lethally take or seriously injure marine mammals from stocks for which the level of incidental lethal takes is unknown but is suspected to be high.

"(D) Fourth, species not described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C).

"(5) The Secretary may establish an alternative observer program to provide statistically reliable information on the species and number of marine mammals incidentally taken in the course of commercial fishing operations. The alternative observer program may include direct observation of fishing activities from vessels, airplanes, or points on shore.

"(6) The Secretary is not required to place an observer on a vessel in a fishery if the Secretary finds that—

"(A) in a situation in which harvesting vessels are delivering fish to a processing vessel and the catch is not taken on board the harvesting vessel, statistically reliable information can be obtained from an observer on board the processing vessel to which the fish are delivered;

"(B) the facilities on a vessel for quartering of an observer, or for carrying out observer functions, are so inadequate or unsafe that the health or safety of the observer or the safe operation of the vessel would be jeopardized; or

"(C) for reasons beyond the control of the Secretary, an observer is not available.

"(7) Any proprietary information collected under this subsection shall be confidential and shall not be disclosed except—

"(A) to Federal employees whose duties require access to such information;

"(B) to State or tribal employees pursuant to an agreement with the Secretary that prevents public disclosure of the identity or business of any person;

"(C) when required by court order; or

"(D) in the case of scientific information involving fisheries, to employees of Regional Fishery Management Councils who are responsible for fishery management plan development and monitoring.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, over two decades ago—in response to public concern about the future survival of whales and dolphins—Congress enacted a moratorium on the killing of marine mammals in the Marine Mammals Protection Act of 1972 [MMPA]. Its purpose was simple: To protect and conserve this Nation's marine mammals. At that time, tens of thousands of dolphins, whales, otters, and other warm-blooded marine creatures were being killed—some intentionally, others incidentally, during fishing operations. Back then, our goal was not only to ensure that stocks of marine mammals did not become depleted, but to help them to recover to optimum sustainable populations.

Congress also recognized that some fishermen will, in the course of their operations, inadvertently take marine mammals; that researchers needed to study them; and that aquariums would be empty unless they could take a few of these creatures from the wild. Consequently, the MMPA provided for certain exemptions from the moratorium.

In the 24 years that the MMPA has been on the books, hundreds of thousands of marine mammals have been saved. Certain stocks, like the grey whale, have been saved from extinction. Other marine mammals, like California sea lions and harbor seals, are flourishing. Unfortunately, despite our best efforts and the protections of the law, some marine mammal stocks continue to be in trouble.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2760 makes a number of important changes to the MMPA, particularly to the provisions governing the taking of marine mammals by commercial fishermen. Improving the law to make sure that fishermen can fish and marine mammals will continue to be protected was the driving force behind the reauthorization. The interim exemption under which fishermen are now operating expires on March 30, and without this legislation we run the risk of having the entire fishing industry in the country shut down. I believe that through the new requirements proposed in the bill, we will realize significant advances toward meeting the goals of the Act.

The provisions of the amendment regarding incidental takes in commercial fisheries:

First, retain the original goal of the MMPA, which is to reduce all incidental takes of marine mammals to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate.

Second, require the Secretary to establish four regional independent scientific review groups—for Alaska, the Pacific coast, the Atlantic coast, and the Gulf of Mexico—to work with the agency on the preparation of stock assessments for each marine mammal stock taken incidental to commercial fishing operations. The stock assessments will address the status of marine mammal stocks, levels of incidental take, and a potential biological removal level that would identify the maximum number of animals that can be taken from each stock without disadvantaging the stock.

Third, directs the Secretary to issue a general authorization allowing fishermen to incidentally take nonendangered, nonthreatened, marine mammals if they comply with registration, monitoring, and reporting requirements; and establishes strict permitting procedures for very limited takes of endangered or threatened species.

Fourth, requires the establishment of take reduction plans for marine mammal stocks. The goal of these plans would be to reduce incidental takes to less than the potential biological removal level within 2 years, and to reach the zero mortality rate goal within 5 years. Plans would be developed by regional teams working with the Secretary. In an effort to assure as much public participation as possible, these teams would include representatives from coastal States regional fishery management councils, scientific organizations, environmental groups, the fishing industry, Alaska Natives, treaty tribes, and whoever else the Secretary deems appropriate. To assure that the process is as fair as possible, we have also required that the teams include an equitable balance among user and nonuser interests.

Overall, the proposed new management regime would establish a process of broad public participation, team effort, and good science that will, I believe, finally allow us to achieve the original goal of this law. The bill also addresses other important issues, which I will briefly summarize.

First, the bill establishes a Pinniped Interaction Task Force to advise the Secretary on the level of impact that seals and sea lions are having on fishery resources and how to mitigate those impacts. The bill also authorizes the Secretary to allow the intentional lethal removal of pinnipedds that are having a significant negative impact on the decline or recovery on threatened or endangered salmonid fishery stocks or on salmonid stocks which the Secretary finds are approaching endangered or threatened species status.

Second, the bill simplifies existing overly burdensome permit restrictions on the scientists whose lives are dedicated to studying and saving these animals.

Third, finally, the bill adds important provisions to the act that strengthen our ability to protect marine mammal habitats. Among other things, these include a requirement for the Secretary to convene workshops to address marine ecosystem protection in the Bering Sea and the Gulf of Maine—two areas of vital importance to the future of marine mammal populations—and to report back to Congress with recommended legislative, research, and regulatory actions.

I am pleased to be able to inform you that the administration supports the legislation, and that the most extensive section of the bill—establishing a new program to manage interactions between marine mammals and commercial fisheries—is supported by some of the largest environmental groups, including Greenpeace, the Center for Marine Conservation, the National Audubon Society, and the World Wildlife Fund. That section of the bill is also supported by a number of fishing organizations.

I want to thank my colleagues on the committee, particularly Mr. FIELDS and Mr. YOUNG, for their patience and their cooperation over the last few months as we have worked to pull together a bill with broad bipartisan support. We will continue to work together with our friends in the other body to enact a law that works, both for fishermen and for marine mammals.

Twenty years ago, tremendous public outcry over the deaths of millions of dolphins in the tuna fishing industry was responsible for the enactment of the MMPA. It was, and still is, a landmark environmental law. Overall, it has worked. Today, the number of dolphins and other marine mammals that are accidentally taken during fishing operations has been reduced by an order of magnitude. As our knowledge and understanding of the environment grows, we are now forced to focus on a new concern: the protection of the marine ecosystems on which these animals depend. These are the same ecosystems on which our fishermen depend and, ultimately, on which we all depend. I believe this bill begins that process of change.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2760, a bill to reauthorize the Marine Mammal Protection Act [MMPA] of 1972.

The MMPA governs a variety of subjects, including public display, scientific research, subsistence use of marine mammals, and the incidental take of marine mammals during commercial fishing operations.

During the past year, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries held a number of hearings to consider various reauthorization issues. It was a pleasure working with you, Chairman STUDDS, and other Members, to draft the language that was adopted last week at our committee markup. While there may be a difference of opinion on certain isolated provisions, the language is indeed a consensus document that is the result of hundreds of hours of hard work, determination, and compromise, and represents a bipartisan effort of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, our committee is being driven by an April 1, 1994, deadline to reauthorize the act. I believe the language outlined in the bill governing the interaction of commercial fishing activities with marine mammals will not be overburdensome. It uses good science through the establishment of scientific working groups and take reduction teams, stock assessments, and the determination of critical stocks. This information is vital in order to make rational decisions based on science rather than emotion or moral judgments.

H.R. 2760 also allows the importation of polar bear trophies from Canada—a country whose polar bear population is healthy. Canada's management program is based on science, which ensures a sustainable polar bear population, and is consistent with international conservation agreements. The bill ensures that conservation of polar bears worldwide is not compromised in any way.

H.R. 2760 also addresses the authority to grant permits for public display, clarifies the roles of various Federal agencies, provides for the welfare of the marine mammals, and meets the needs of the public display community.

Again, Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure having the opportunity to work with Chairman STUDDS and Congressman YOUNG to ensure that our marine mammal resources are properly managed in the future. I support adoption and urge all Members to vote "aye" on this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, American commercial fishing fleets need this bill to pass before the April 1 deadline—or they face severe consequences. I understand this fact. However, the legislation we are considering reauthorizes for 6 years a law which has a tremendous impact on coastal States. Yet H.R. 2760 was moved through subcommittee and committee markups to be considered on the floor under the suspension process, which effectively prevents Members from exercising their right to offer amendments on the floor. I predict that in our rush, we will end up with a less-than-best piece of legislation, or at least one with significant omissions. For instances, I would have liked to have worked out and offered an amendment to allow States to provide additional protection for marine mammals which reside in State waters. By so amending the Marine Mammal Protection Act [MMPA], we could close a loophole that actually hinders or removes protection for marine mammals in some instances. I believe that it is an unfortunate irony that under the current rules of the MMPA, States are denied the ability to safeguard specific populations of mammals in certain carefully designated waters of their own. In my State of Florida, there are laws on the books which would prohibit the capture of marine mammals in areas known as aquatic preserves, which are specifically defined by statute, and have clearly defined borders. These areas have been set aside because the duly elected government of Florida has publicly and in the sunshine decided that the preservation of the natural resources within these boundaries is vital to the public interest. Many public hearings have occurred. But the Marine Mammal Protection Act unfortunately, and I believe inadvertently, preempts Florida's—and any other State's—efforts to responsibly protect natural resources. Mr. Speaker, that is unfinished business that needs attention. I will pursue it another day, in difference to the need to move H.R. 2760, but I regret the procedure we are using today.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, Florida currently holds about 40 percent of all captive dolphins. In addition, most of the dolphins that are seen in theme parks across the country were probably captured in Florida waters, This also holds true for dolphins exported to other countries.

In 1972, Congress passed the Marine Mammal Protection Act [MMPA], to ensure that these mammals were maintained at, or restored to, healthy population levels. The act established a moratorium on taking or importing marine mammals except for certain activities regulated and permitted under the act. These permitted activities include public display and scientific research.

Unfortunately, jurisdiction over marine mammals has been divided among several agencies and I believe we have had a class example of the dangers of Federal bureaucracy. We have several agencies contradicting one another with regard to this act, and in some cases, the agencies have not ensured that dolphins are being treated humanely and captured properly.

In the 102d Congress, I introduced legislation titled The Marine Mammal Capture, Export and Public Display Act. I reintroduced this legislation in the 103d Congress.

Thus, I am pleased today that the committee has incorporated a few key provisions from my legislation into H.R. 2760. After working with the Chairman STUDDS and the ranking member on the subcommittee, Congressman YOUNG of Alaska, I believe we have been able to accomplish much of what I proposed. It has been a pleasure to work with my colleagues to amend the act and make needed reforms.

The intent of this bill is to protect dolphins held in captivity and to reform the procedures which are designed to protect their health and safety.

One of the provisions incorporated in this legislation concerns marine mammal export. Currently, the Marine Mammal Protection Act is silent on the export of marine mammals either caught in U.S. waters or bred in U.S. zoos and aquaria.

The provision incorporated in H.R. 2760 will end this silence and help equalize the treatment of dolphins in the U.S. and foreign countries. I believe it is simply hypocritical to place stringent requirements on theme parks and oceanariums in this country but allow dolphins to be exported to other countries where they may be mistreated.

H.R. 2760 provides that no marine mammal may be exported for the purpose of public display, scientific research, or enhancing the survival or recovery of a species or stock unless the receiving facility meets the standards of the United States.

H.R. 2760 also provides that the secretary of the national marine fisheries service shall establish an inventory of all marine mammals possessed pursuant to permits issued. Under this provision, the secretary must keep a record of the date of death of the marine mammal and the cause of death when determined.

These provisions, which were also contained in my original bill will help to ensure an accurate tracking system will be maintained. Thus, in turn, will add greatly in the enforcement of other provisions of this act.

Once again, I would like to thank Chairman STUDDS and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee for their work on this important legislation. The inclusion of the export and inventory provisions are a significant step forward in dolphin protection. I hope that we examine closely the secretary's findings as an inventory is kept, so that we can continue to upgrade this legislation to ensure that marine mammals are treated in a humane manner.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2760, legislation to reauthorize the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

Congress established the MMPA in 1972 to protect dolphins, whales and other marine mammals from the adverse effects of fishing and other human activities. MMPA banned the capture or import of marine mammals except for research or public display. Although the act has always allowed the incidental taking of some marine mammals during fishing operations, a 1988 amendment to the MMPA required an end to all incidental takings by 1993. In the meantime, Congress directed the National Marine Fisheries Service to develop a long range plan to preserve these mammals.

On July 27, 1993, the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee, Mr. STUDDS, introduced H.R. 2760, the Marine Mammal Protection Act amendments of 1993, to reauthorize the MMPA for 6 years. That bill was a good starting point, but as it turned out, we still had a long way to go. As the committee began looking more closely at the issues surrounding the MMPA, it became evident that we needed more time to address a wide range of questions regarding marine mammal protection and incidental takings. Consequently, the committee approved and Congress passed a simple extension of the act to give us until April to complete work.

The bill that is before us now is the result of some extraordinary work that was done by Chairman STUDDS and the distinguished gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG], during that extended period.

H.R. 2760 would impose a prohibition on the intentional killing of marine mammals. The bill correctly aims to reduce accidental marine mammal deaths from encounters with fishing operations to levels approaching zero within 5 years of enactment. It requires the Secretaries of Commerce and Interior to perform and publish stock assessments for all marine mammal populations occurring in U.S. waters that might be adversely impacted by fishing operations or other activities. The secretaries must establish take reduction teams comprised of scientists, environmentalists, government officials and representatives of the fishing industry. These teams, in turn, must develop plans to reduce the level of accidental marine mammal deaths to near zero. The legislation would also grant the Secretaries regulatory and emergency powers to address any activities that are having an immediate and significant adverse impact on a stock of marine mammals.

H.R. 2760 also lessens some of the bureaucratic burden on the scientific and display community. Under this legislation, holders of display or scientific permits will no longer have to apply for permits to transfer or sell marine mammals from one licensed facility to another. From now on, they will merely have to notify the secretary of the transfer or sale in advance of the transaction. The legislation also adds new export language requiring that a receiving facility meet the standards of the Animal Welfare Act.

Let me say that this is not a perfect bill. I do not feel uncomfortable saying that, because it is a fact that the chairman himself has pointed out repeatedly. There are some provisions in the bill that concern me, such as the language that will allow—for the first time in 22 years—the importation of polar bear trophies or viscera into this country. I believe that Chairman STUDDS, Mr. FIELDS and Mr. YOUNG have crafted the language to be as narrow and protective of the polar bear as possible—a fact which is evidenced by the provisions regarding international polar bear conservation. Yet, I remain concerned about the policy implications of putting the Secretary of the Interior in the position of giving DE FACTO approval to Canada's polar bear hunt, when it is the stated goal of the MMPA to end the intentional killing of marine mammals. Having said this, I should point out that I did support the chairman in committee on this issue because I understand the importance of moving this legislation and the care with which my colleagues wrote the provision.

While I support removing needles bureaucratic tape from the scientific and display communities, I also remain concerned about the animal plant health inspection service's enforcement of the Animal Welfare Act with respect to marine mammals. In the last session, I joined with Congressman BILIRAKIS as an original cosponsor of his bill, H.R. 656, which would mandate—among other things—that Aphis update its regulations. I believe it is time for Aphis to review and revise their regulations and to strengthen their enforcement of the AWA, and I will be working with Mr. BILIRAKIS and others to make sure that our captive marine mammals are treated humanely.

I want to express my gratitude and appreciation to the Chairman, Mr. YOUNG and their staffs for their hard work on a difficult task. I especially want to thank Karen Steuer and Rod Moore for their work and their efforts to accommodate me in making some changes to the final bill. This is a balanced bill that will go a long way toward improving the protection of marine mammals, while at the same time allowing our fishermen to continue to do their job.

I urge my colleagues to pass this measure.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 2760, legislation that reauthorizes the Marine Mammal Protection Act through fiscal year 1999. I commend the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS], who is also the chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, for introducing this worthwhile legislation. I strongly believe that the reauthorization legislation that we are discussing today, represents a fair compromise that will continue to prevent the extinction of marine mammals.

By amending the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972, the original legislation is strengthened, and will continue to ensure the well being of porpoises, seals, and other marine mammals.

H.R. 2760, will improve the Marine Mammal Protection Act in a variety of ways. First, H.R. 2760, will establish a new system to govern the incidental taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations. This legislation allows permits to be issued for the incidental taking of endangered or threatened marine mammals, if certain criteria are met. Also, the Secretary of Commerce is required to issue a general authorization allowing for the incidental taking of marine mammals during commercial fishing operations. However, the fishing industry must comply with strict registration guidelines, as well as monitoring and reporting regulations. H.R. 2760, also calls for fishermen, government representatives, biologists, and environmentalists to work with the Secretary of Commerce in developing long-term conservation plans for marine mammals.

Other highlights of H.R. 2760, include: A provision allowing individuals to take or import marine mammals for the purpose of public display, if certain criteria are met; a provision requiring the Secretary of Commerce to establish a task force to study the impact that seals and lions have on salmonid fish stocks; and a provision to allow American sport hunters, who legally kill polar bears in Canada, to bring their trophies back into the United States.

I am pleased to support the reauthorization of the Marine Mammal Protection Act. I believe that this compromise legislation will continue to maintain our marine mammals, who without the protections might become extinct, while at the same time this legislation will enable our commercial fishermen to operate their businesses.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2760, our committee's bill to reauthorize the Marine Mammal Protection Act, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The MMPA's success in restoring marine mammal populations on the west coast is evident by the robust species of California sea lions and Pacific harbor seals that range throughout Washington, Oregon, and California. These mammals contribute much to the unique nature of our marine ecosystems, and are enjoyed by both residents and visitors alike.

This success, however, is tempered by the public's perception that there are growing problems caused by robust species. Sea lions and seals have crowded public areas, plaguing efforts to rebuild salmon and steelhead runs and closing shellfish beds due to threat of fecal contamination.

The public perception in the Northwest is that Federal and State wildlife managers are turning a blind eye to these problems because of the controversy that surrounds taking any action relating to these animals. Wildlife managers appropriately respond by pointing out that the MMPA's strictures make it virtually impossible to respond effectively to problems as they are developing. The result has been an unorganized and ad hoc response that merely delays meaningful discussion of long-term solutions.

Our committee's bill attempts to respond to these concerns with two provisions aimed at providing some structure into the identification and response to problems associated with robust species of marine mammals on the west coast.

First, to address immediate, short-term problems—whether real or perceived—our committee's bill establishes a pinniped/fishery interaction task force to advise the Secretary of Commerce on ways to minimize negative interactions. The bill also provides for States to petition the Secretary to authorize lethal removal of individually identifiable pinnipeds which are having a significant negative impact on the decline or recovery of a salmonid fishery which is or may be becoming threatened or endangered.

For the long-term, our committee's bill directs the Secretary to sit down with the States of Washington, Oregon, and California to identify problems caused by robust species of marine mammals and to develop a broad range of options for each of the problem areas. The product of these discussions would be a draft management plan that would be reviewed by the Marine Mammal Commission, independent scientists, and environmental interests. The plan, along with comments generated during the review process, would then be submitted to this committee. The cornerstone of this amendment is that any management options proposed in the Federal/State plan not already authorized by existing law would require approval by this committee and Congress before being implemented.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear I do not claim that seals and sea lions are what's causing the decline of our salmon runs in the Northwest, and any attempt to make them the scapegoat is wrong. However, if our struggles with forests and fish in the Northwest have taught us anything, it's that we must act proactively in managing our resources before the endangered species listings and the crises and the devastation began.

Finally, our committee's bill represents a major step forward in minimizing the type of harmful interactions with commercial fishing operations which would threaten marine mammal populations. The new regulations which will result from the legislation stem from a long series of meetings between representatives of the animal protection community and the commercial fishing industry. These negotiations, which took several months, resulted in a joint proposal which represented compromises on both sides. However, the bottom line is that the protection of marine mammals will be greatly enhanced. These improvements do not come without some cost on the part of the fishing industry, and we are very pleased that commercial fishermen have realized that the protection and restoration of marine mammal stocks is in the long-term interest of all users of the marine environment.

The current regulatory regime under which our commercial fishing industry is operating expires at the end of this month. These regulations have already been extended by Congress once and it is imperative that we replace this stop-gap measure with permanent legislation that will provide longer term solutions to these issues.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I request permission to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this bipartisan bill and urge its adoption by the House.

This bill is the result of three hearings, numerous meetings, many written comments, and literally hundreds of hours of work by the committee staff. Karen Steuer and Tod Preston of the majority staff, and Rod Moore and Tom Melius of the minority staff, have labored late into the night and around the clock on weekends to assist the members of our committee on putting together a bill that is supported by fishermen, processors, environmental groups, wildlife conservation organizations, individual States, Native Alaskans, zoos and aquariums, scientists, and the administration.

Even more important is the hard work put into this bill by the chairman of our committee, GERRY STUDDS. Chairman STUDDS has been criticized by some extreme animal rights groups for his willingness to act in a fair and reasonable manner when dealing with the many difficult issues that this bill presents. That criticism is unjustified and unfair and should be condemned.

During the 21 years that I have served in the House, I have always known Chairman STUDDS to be a leader in efforts to conserve our natural resources. Even when we have been on opposite sides of an issue, he has been willing to listen to all points of view. Many of the major resource conservation bills that our committee has seen enacted into law over the years have been the result of Chairman STUDDS' efforts. He should be applauded for those efforts.

This bill attempts to finally solve a major problem that exists in the ocean. Fishermen catch fish; so do marine mammals. Unfortunately, as much as they try to avoid it, fishermen also catch marine mammals.

When the Marine Mammal Protection Act was passed by the Congress in 1972 under the leadership of our colleague, JOHN DINGELL, the problem of interaction between fishermen and marine mammals was recognized and a permit process was included that encouraged fishermen not to catch marine mammals, but exempted them from penalties if they did. However, in 1987, a Federal court decision effectively made that process useless.

In 1988, we passed a set of amendments to the act allowing a 5-year exemption for fishermen while a new incidental take process was developed. That process is what we have in our bill today. We have provided for increased research on marine mammals stocks and the development of take-reduction plans designed to reduce—as low as possible—the number of marine mammals taken. This is a major change in the way our fishermen will be forced to operate.

In establishing this system, two things should be made clear: First, fishermen want to be part of the regulatory system and we expect the Federal Government to work with—not against—U.S. fishermen in developing take-reduction plans. Second, this system relies on providing good scientific information. We authorize the resources necessary to get this information and we expect the Federal Government to carry out its obligations.

This system will not work if Federal agencies try to ignore the input of fishermen or try to force decisions based on bad data. If we find that the Federal Government is not cooperating or is trying to use this bill to promote some other policy agenda, I promise you that we will be back in this House Chamber setting things right.

In addition to the sections of this bill dealing with fisheries, we have also included a number of amendments clarifying the respective roles of Federal agencies in regulating zoos and aquariums. These amendments are necessary to avoid excessive regulatory zeal on the part of the Federal Government, which has attempted to ignore the clear intent of Congress in the act.

Finally, the bill makes absolutely clear that nothing in the fisheries section in any way affects the rights of Alaskan Natives that were granted by section 101(b) of the act. Further, the bill authorizes the continuation of the successful comanagement agreements between the Federal Government and Alaska Native organizations regarding marine mammals and encourages the Federal Government to enter into new agreements for other species.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good, bipartisan, conservation bill. I urge all Members to support it.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2760, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks. Mr. Speaker, the reauthorization of the Marine Mammal Protection Act has been an arduous task and I would like to thank the chairman and the ranking minority members, Mr. FIELDS and Mr. YOUNG, for their leadership and guidance throughout this process.

Since the MMPA was enacted in 1972, it has served to protect various marine mammal populations in the wild from various human threats. The act also safeguards marine mammals by managing human activities affecting them in their natural habitat.

I am aware that there are many sections of this bill that address myriad issues, but I would like to focus on one important portion of this bill that deals with the regulation of and interaction of the agencies that oversee the issue of public display. Through the years, there has been much confusion over what role each agency should play. Most recently, this confusion was demonstrated in October, when the National Marine Fisheries Service issued their proposed permit regulations.

I would like to thank the chairman and Mr. YOUNG for clarifying the confusion that this proposed rule caused, and for correcting the problem between agencies. The amendments regarding public display are intended to establish a clear public policy regarding the regulation of activities affecting marine mammals in zoological settings. Over the past 5 years, there has been much confusion in the zoological community due to overlapping jurisdictions. Permits have been delayed for unreasonable periods of time and unnecessary, burdensome, and improper conditions have been attached to such permits.

In addressing this problem, we in committee were able to reaffirm that the standards for the humane handling, care, treatment, and transportation of marine mammals are established under the Animal Welfare Act [AWA] and are developed and administered exclusively by the Animal Plant Health Inspection Service [APHIS] within the Department of Agriculture.

This was done to clarify that the National Marine Fisheries Service cannot set its own standards, by regulation or by attaching to the permits general or specific conditions relating to captive maintenance, since the National Marine Fisheries Service has no authority to do so under the Animal Welfare Act, and still does not have authority to do so under the reauthorization of the MMPA.

Rather, in deciding to issue a permit to an individual or entity that would allow them to "take;" that is, collect from the wild, or import a marine mammal for purposes of public display, the only determination that NMFS can make, from the perspective of captive maintenance, is whether the individual or entity has an APHIS license or registration. Possession of such a license automatically means that the licensee's standards for the humane handling, care, treatment, and transportation of the marine mammals to be taken and imported meet the requirements of the Animal Welfare Act.

Section 102(a) of the act has been amended by deleting the words "for any purpose or any way connected to the taking of marine mammals." The deleted words are now replaced by the words to "take or import." In addition, the words "and after" in section 104(c)(1) were deleted. The Intent of these amendments is to clarify that the conditions that the Secretary may include in a section 104(c) permit concerning the "supervision, care, and transportation that must be observed pursuant to such taking or importation" only pertain to the actual take from the wild, that is, capture and collection; or import but not to the subsequent supervision, care, and transportation of marine mammal in captivity. After the taking or importation, the standards for the care and maintenance of the marine mammal are established by the Animal Welfare Act and the regulations issued thereunder.

Further, this amendment clarifies that the act's prohibition with regard to the "take" of marine mammals refers to the collection of marine mammals from the wild. After a marine mammal is lawfully collected; for example, under a section 104 permit, the Secretary does not have the authority to regulate the subsequent captive maintenance of the animal.

It has also been clarified that NMFS may issue, as has always been the case, "one-time" permits to take or import marine mammals for purposes of public display. These permits need not be renewed by NMFS periodically once the marine mammal is taken or imported. They are, as also has been the case since the original passage of the MMPA, permits to individuals or entities in relation to the take or import of scientific marine mammals.

Once a marine mammal is taken or imported pursuant to a permit, then it, or its progeny will no longer require any additional permit or authorization in order to possessed, sold or purchased, transported, exported, or offered to be sold or purchased if the persons involved in any subsequent transaction, meet the requirements that would be necessary under the MMPA to obtain a permit for the purposes of public display, or scientific research or enhancing the survival of a species of stock.

The committee also intends by these amendments to establish the policy that determinations made by the Secretary of Commerce with regard to education or conservation programs are limited to whether programs are based on professionally recognized standards of the public display community; such as, but not limited to, standards already in place for members of the American Zoo and Aquarium Association. The Secretary does not have the authority under this provision to establish any standards or regulations regarding education or conservation programs. This amendment to the current law is consistent with the first amendment of the Constitution which essentially prohibits the Government from issuing "content-based" regulations.

The committee also believes that a person should have the same rights with respect to the progeny of a marine mammal taken or imported under section 106(c) as those rights granted for the take of a marine mammal for public display. Thus, a permit for the purposes of public display grants the possessor of the marine mammal and its progeny the right, under certain circumstances, to subsequently purchase, offer to purchase, possess, or transport, sell, export, or otherwise transfer possession of the progeny, without the need to obtain any additional permit or authorization under the MMPA.

The persons involved in any subsequent transaction must meet the requirements that would be necessary under the MMPA to obtain a permit for purposes of publicly display, scientific research, or enhancing the survival of a species or stock.

Finally, the committee intends to establish that existing permits, issued prior to the enactment of these amendments, are automatically modified to be consistent with these amendments. Thus, for example, any terms or conditions that the Secretary has incorporated into existing permits that relate to actual public display of the marine mammals; in the inspection of public display facilities and related records; or the captive maintenance or the standards for the humane handling, care, treatment, and transportation of marine mammals after they are taken or imported pursuant to a permit to take or import for purposes of public display; are null and void.

I believe the changes adopted in the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee will clear up the confusion over public display.

Aquariums and zoos have faced substantial ambiguity in this area, but the language before us should solve this problem.

Mr. Speaker, again, I salute Chairman STUDDS, Congressman FIELDS, and Congressman YOUNG for their hard work on this issue. H.R. 2760 is an excellent bill, with strong bipartisan support. I urge the House to pass it without delay.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Mr. STUDDS, Mr. SAXTON, Mr. YOUNG, and the other members of the committee for including language in H.R. 2760 to create a special committee of the Pinniped-Fishery Interaction Task Force that will study the problem of seal predation on aquaculture pens in Maine. Mainers and visitors to my State very much enjoy and appreciate the healthy populations of seals living along our coast. Seals account for a significant share of coastal Maine's great appeal to people all over the world.

But unfortunately, as Maine's salmon aquaculture industry has developed in recent years, some seals have begun to invade fish pens for an easy meal, damaging the pens and releasing fish in the process. The Maine aquaculture industry estimates the cost of this damage in the millions of dollars. Not all seals exhibit this predatory behavior, but the ones that do seem to repeat their predations. Clearly, something must be done to ensure the peaceful coexistence of both seals and the aquaculture industry on the coast of Maine.

The special committee of the Pinniped-Fishery Interaction Task Force will analyze the problem in Maine, identify existing nonlethal means of mitigation, recommend research on additional means of mitigation, and examine whether limited intentional lethal takes of seals should be permitted if nonlethal alternatives do not succeed in protecting salmon pens from seals. The committee membership will include industry officials, State officials, environmentalists, and scientists from the affected region, and the bill requires the special committee to submit its report within 2 years of enactment.

The special committee idea represents a considered response to the seal-aquaculture interaction problem in Maine, and I look forward to the constructive contribution that the special committee's work will make to a responsible resolution of the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to support H.R. 2760, but not without a serious reservation. Section 9 of the bill on commercial fishing operations establishes a goal of reducing by-catch for marine mammals stocks designated as strategic below the level of potential biological removal within 1 year of the completion of a take reduction plan. I fear that in the case of the harbor porpoise, this goal could be too ambitious for the Maine gillnet industry.

In New England, gillnet interactions have contributed significantly to the decline of the harbor porpoise species, which is now estimated at about 47,200 animals in the Gulf of Maine. Gillnetters in Maine with whom I have spoken express a sincere regret that harbor porpoises become entangled in their nets and drown. They respect and appreciate the harbor porpoise, as do any of us here today, and they are determined to reduce their by-catch of the species. In fact, harbor porpoise/gillnet interactions in the Gulf of Maine appear to have declined dramatically from 2,400 animals in 1990 to 900 in 1992.

Under amendment 5 to the northeast multispecies fishery management plan, gillnet fishermen will be required to substantially reduce harbor porpoise by-catch, initially through time-area closures. Harbor porpoise by-catch will almost certainly continue to decline as a result of these measures.

But if, in the future, these time-area closures expand and become too long, and the area covered too large, fishermen could be put out of business. Luckily, research conducted to date on pinger devices, which emit unpleasant sounds that deter porpoises from gillnets, has been promising. Although more research is needed, pingers could help meet the dual goals of protecting the harbor porpoise population in the Gulf of Maine while giving fishermen a chance to make a living.

I firmly believe that the Maine gillnet fleet will find a way to reduce its by-catch below PBR in a manner which enables them to keep fishing, but 1 year, as proposed in the bill, may be too short. I requested a 4-year deadline period to meet PBR, but the committee declined my request.

While I am disappointed that the committee could not accommodate the Maine gillnet fleet, I should point out that the bill only establishes a 1-year goal, not a hard compliance deadline, so I do not expect fishermen to be penalized for not meeting this ambitious goal if they are making a serious effort to reduce by-catch.

In the meantime, I appreciate the committee's strong encouragement, in the bill report, of the National Marine Fisheries Service's continued involvement with gillnet gear modification research, particularly with regard to pinger devices. This technology could provide a big part of the answer in resolving the gillnet-harbor porpoise interaction problem.

Again, I thank the committee for responding to my request on seal-aquaculture interactions in Maine, and I look forward to working with the committee in the future on the harbor porpoise/gillnet issue.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I commend the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and, in particular, its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS], for the long hours of work dedicated to bringing this bill to the floor. From the opening days of the 103d Congress, the chairman and the committee have struggled with this complex and contentious legislation.

At the heart of the committee's quandary was the question of when, and under what circumstances, to sanction the killing of a marine mammal. Many residents of the Pacific Northwest are justifiably upset over the alarming decline of the region's anadromous fish populations. And marine mammal species that consume large numbers of weak salmon stocks understandably are targets of this frustration.

The committee's struggle mirrors one that has been ongoing in my district at the Hiram M. Chittendon Locks for more than a decade. Commonly called the Ballard Locks, this facility is the site of perhaps the most publicized and controversial encounter between marine mammals and a fish species. Each year from January to May, as they gather in the channel leading to the Locks, California sea lions are estimated to consume up to 60 percent of a Lake Washington Steelhead run now on the brink of extinction.

To be sure, the California sea lions that appear annually at the Ballard Locks are not to blame for the decline of the Lake Washington steelhead runs. That blame is more fairly attributed to the decades of urban development that has destroyed valuable spawning habitat, altered natural river courses, and poured pollution into our waters.

But it has become clear that the survival of the steelhead may depend upon the option to kill the sea lions that feed upon them at the Ballard Locks. Annually, more than 1,600 returning steelhead are needed to sustain the population, but so far this winter fewer than 50 fish have passed through the fish ladder at the locks. As the number of spawning steelhead returning from open sea declines, it becomes all the more critical to protect them from predation by sea lions at the locks. For this reason, I am not opposed to the provision in this bill which allows States to petition the Secretary of Commerce for permission to remove sea lions by lethal means.

Also, I am supportive of the task force established in this legislation to advise the Secretary on all matters related to the management and protection of marine mammals. In the long run, a task force embracing diverse opinion will improve our understanding and management of marine mammals and their interaction with fish stocks.

However, these two measures alone do not address adequately the current crisis my constituents are facing at the Ballard Locks. Last November, I formed a local task force that recommended immediate steps to be taken to protect the current run of spawning steelhead from sea lion predation. Among the recommendations was a fish tracking study to be conducted by the appropriate State and Federal fisheries agencies. This study is the first of this kind in which scientists have been able to track movement of fish through the area of predation at the locks, and it is critical that we continue to build upon the knowledge we gain from this study.

I have been working with the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee staff and members of the committee from the Pacific Northwest to amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act to authorize additional money for the purpose of identifying and constructing fish passage and fish ladder improvements at the Ballard Locks to aid in the recovery of salmonid fishery stocks. This authorization would help my constituents pursue any reasonable measure to protect steelhead and minimize predation upon them by sea lions. Although this authority may already exist in the abstract, congressional direction is necessary to give our efforts the high priority they merit.

Although the committee did not act upon my request for additional language, it is my steadfast belief that that language must be included in the final bill. As the bill is moving under suspension of the rules, I hope to ensure that this issue is addressed in conference. I understand that Senators MURRAY and GORTON have included language in the Senate bill similar to that which I proposed in the House. I hope that the issue can be resolved when the House and Senate meet to reconcile their versions of the Marine Mammal Protection Act, at which point I will be pleased to support the bill.

In my efforts to resolve the conflict at the Ballard Locks, I have learned that we can overcome disagreements over management of marine mammals if we respect the values inherent in the diverse positions. No one I have encountered wants to kill sea lions for frivolous reasons. And no one wants to stand by while the Lake Washington steelhead run disappears. Having recognized the validity of the various sides, it is possible to move toward a reasonable common ground, and I appreciate the efforts of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to do so.

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my distinguished colleague, Mr. STUDDS, the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, for his leadership and diligence in bringing this important bill to the floor. As always, he has endeavored to craft a reasonable and meaningful piece of legislation which, while not necessarily to everyone's liking, effectively addresses a multitude of complex and emotional issues.

H.R. 2760, a bill to reauthorize the Marine Mammal Protection Act, is the result of many months of hard work and negotiations between Members of Congress, the administration, fisheries interests, and environmental and conservation organizations. The bill is the culmination of a bipartisan and an open, inclusive process which should serve as a model for future such undertakings.

Mr. Speaker, I understand there are some who are still not satisfied with particular provisions of this legislation, and I can understand and certainly appreciate their concerns. The complexity of this act and the emotional nature of the issues at hand virtually necessitates that not everyone is going to agree with each and every tough choice that has been made or compromise which has been hammered out in order for this legislation to reach the floor today. However, I believe they do themselves and their cause a disservice by challenging the motifs of the chairman and the open process under which this legislation was developed. I cannot think of another chairman or committee that are as willing and capable of developing a major piece of legislation in a more fair manner.

As the chairman of the Subcommittee on Fisheries Management, I am particularly pleased we are moving expeditiously on this matter. The Nation's commercial fishing interests are facing a deadline of April 1, 1994. If we do not pass and the President does not sign the reauthorization bill into law by this date, virtually all commercial fisheries in our country will be brought to a standstill. This is clearly an unacceptable situation, and I believe the passage of this legislation is the right way to proceed at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to take this opportunity to address another provision of the pending legislation which is of importance to me. I believe, as we pursue these amendments to the Marine Mammal Protection Act, we must strongly reaffirm public display of marine mammals as one of the primary means of educating the public, providing much-needed research, and fostering concern for these majestic creatures of the sea. Anything less would be a disservice to the American public. I believe this legislation accomplishes this goal.

I understand that more than 105 million people a year visit the zoos, marine parks, and aquariums of the United States. These institutions have played an undeniable role in educating the public and arousing their interest in conservation and environmental issues.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that New York City can claim some of the Nation's most highly regarded zoos and aquariums, including the Central Park Wildlife Center and the Aquarium for Wildlife Conservation. In most instances, the people who come to the zoo or aquarium could not see wild animals in any other setting—including such relatively common marine mammals as seals and sea lions. By visiting zoos and aquariums, the average citizen has an excellent opportunity to learn about these animals and gain an appreciation for the need to protect them and their habitats.

The amendments regarding public display are intended to establish clear public policy regarding the regulation or activities affecting marine mammals in zoological settings. During the past 5 years, the zoological and scientific communities have faced a confusing and inconsistent regulatory regime which they have sought to clarify either through regulation or legislation. Many in the display community believe their permit applications have been unreasonably delayed and seemingly unnecessary and burdensome conditions have been attached to such permits.

Mr. Speaker, it is our intent by this legislation to reaffirm that the standards for the humane handling, care, treatment, and transportation of marine mammals are established under the Animal Welfare Act [AWA] and are developed and administered exclusively by the Animal Plant Health Inspection Service [APHIS] within the Department of Agriculture. These amendments to the MMPA, therefore, clearly establish that the National Marine Fisheries Service has no role or authority to regulate the captive maintenance of marine mammals.

Section 102(a) of the act has been amended by deleting the words "for any purpose or any way connected to the taking of marine mammals." The deleted words are now replaced by the words to "take or import." In addition, the words "and after" in section 104(c)(1) were deleted. The intent of these amendments is to clarify that the conditions that the Secretary may include in a section 104(c) permit concerning the "supervision, care, and transportation that must be observed pursuant to such taking or importation" only pertain to the actual take from the wild—that is, capture and collection—or import, but not to the subsequent supervision, care, and transportation of marine mammals in captivity.

The legislation also makes clear that the permits that NMFS may issue under the MMPA to take or import marine mammals for purpose of public display are, as has always been the case, one-time permits that need not be renewed by NMFS periodically once the marine mammal is taken or imported. They are, as has been the case since the original passage of the MMPA, permits to individuals or entities in relation to the take or import of specific marine mammals.

Mr. Speaker, therefore, once a marine mammal is taken or imported pursuant to a permit, then it, or its progeny, will no longer require any additional permit or authorization in order to be possessed, sold or purchased, transported, exported, or offered to be sold or purchased if the persons involved in any subsequent possession, sale, purchase, transportation, export, or offer for sale or purchase, meet the requirements that would be necessary under the MMPA to obtain a permit for purposes of public display, or scientific research or enhancing the survival of a species or stock. As such this language clarifies that any person to whom a marine mammal is transferred does not need to obtain a permit to possess that marine mammal.

We also intend by these amendments to establish the policy that determinations made by the Secretary of Commerce with regard to education or conservation programs are limited to whether programs are based on professionally recognized standards of the public display community—such as, but not limited to, standards already in place for members of the American Zoo and Aquarium Association. The Secretary does not have the authority under this provision to establish any standards or regulations regarding education or conservation programs. This amendment to the current law is consistent with the first amendment of the Constitution which essentially prohibits the Government from issuing content-based regulations.

We also believe that a person should have the same rights with respect to the progeny of a marine mammal taken or imported under section 104(c) as those rights granted for the take of a marine mammal for public display.

Finally, we intend to establish that existing permits, issued prior to the enactment of these amendments, are automatically modified to be consistent with these amendments.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman, and offer my appreciation to the majority and minority staffs of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee for their fine work in bringing this legislation to fruition.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2760, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 for 6 fiscal years, to establish a new regime to govern the incidental taking of marine mammals in the course of commercial fishing operations, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BALLAST WATER MANAGEMENT ACT

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3360) to direct the Secretary of Transportation to demonstrate on vessels ballast water management technologies and practices, including vessel modification and design, that will prevent aquatic nonindigenous species from being introduced and spread in the United States waters, as amended.

H.R. 3360

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Ballast Water Management Act".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Ballast Water Management Act has a laudable goal—stopping the spread of aquatic nuisances in the Great Lakes and other U.S. waters. Ten years ago, no one has ever heard of the zebra mussel, a now quite infamous aquatic pest which entered the Great Lakes in the ballast water of vessels coming from foreign ports. Today, we have more zebra mussels in the Great Lakes than we know what to do with. They are clogging pipes and costing local economies millions if not billions of dollars to control. And they are spreading to other waterways.

Merchant Marine Subcommittee Chairman LIPINSKI has come up with an innovative proposal to help stop the proliferation of these unwanted critters by testing new vessel technologies to prevent the introduction and dispersal of aquatic nuisances. His proposal calls upon the Marine Board of the National Research Council to identify new technologies and practices that can keep aquatic nuisances from being transferred via ship ballast water. After the Marine Board completes its evaluation, the Maritime Administration will conduct a demonstration of potentially useful technologies identified by the Board on vessels which ply U.S. waters.

I support Chairman LIPINSKI's approach and urge the bill's passage by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3360, the Ballast Water Management Act, authored by my friend, Chairman LIPINSKI of Illinois.

I remember when the Members of the Great Lakes delegation asked us to support their battle against the zebra mussel. We may have thought it was a bad science fiction movie, but nonindigenous species are certainly not a laughing matter.

In fact, economic losses from the zebra mussel, which hitchhiked its way into the Great Lakes via ballast water, may equal $3.4 billion. Moreover, the Office of Technology Assessment has concluded that nonnative aquatic species are a threat to the entire Nation. After the extensive flooding in the Midwest washed most of the Mississippi River and its tributaries through New Orleans, I expect to see zebra mussels and other unwanted visitors in the Gulf of Mexico any day now.

The need for further research on ballast water as a means of spreading unwanted aquatic species is clear. Ships need ballast water to ensure the safety of the vessel and its crew. However, over 15 million gallons of ballast water are discharged into U.S. waters every year. Because many of these vessels drew ballast water into their tanks in foreign ports, you can only imagine what harmful species may be lurking there waiting to take up residence in the United States. In addition, vessels which draw in infested U.S. waters can spread aquatic nuisance species to other U.S. ports and to other countries.

Chairman LIPINSKI's bill will help stop this spread of infestation. The bill builds on the existing work now being conducted by the Secretary of Transportation and the Federal Interagency Aquatic Nuisance Species Task Force under the Nonindigenous Aquatic Nuisance Prevention and Control Act of 1990. The bill mandates an evaluation of ballast water management technologies and practices and directs the Administrator of the Maritime Administration to put the most promising of these technologies and practices to the test on actual vessels so that we can gauge their effectiveness, practicality, and cost.

Both the evaluation and demonstration program are subject to the availability of appropriations. Given the current budget situation, and the charge that the Federal Government merely hands out directives to Federal agencies without providing the funding for them, I believe this is a reasonable approach.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote "aye" on H.R. 3360.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, March 5, I was honored to participate in a change of command ceremony aboard the U.S.S. Canopus [AS 34] which is a submarine tender assigned to the Kings Bay Naval Submarine Base in my district. As Admiral Ellis, the base commander, toured me around following the ceremony, he mentioned an activity, the cleaning and removal of aquatic nuisance biological species—including nonindigenous species—from the ballast and seawater system components of Navy ships, which I immediately thought you and our subcommittee should hear about.

During testimony on H.R. 3360 last year, I did not hear any mention of the apparently lengthy and exhaustive research which has been undertaken by the U.S. Navy in the area of prevention and control of harmful native and nonnative aquatic organisms. Yet, it would appear that the Navy has been working on this problem for more than 7 years, and has made significant progress in developing an effective control methodology.

I believe this information may have an important bearing upon our action regarding H.R. 3360. When I returned from Kings Bay, I asked my staff to find out which firms were involved with the Navy on this project, and I have since visited with one such contractor briefly. I was impressed enough to suggest that they visit with the staff of the subcommittee, and have tried to let our chairman and ranking member know of these facts which could lead to improvements in H.R. 3360 as we move on through the legislative process.

I have no desire to impede progress, and I wholeheartedly support the goals embodied in H.R. 3360. However, it would appear that we might be missing a great opportunity to make the final measure even better by not acknowledging the ongoing efforts of the Navy and its contractors and somehow taking advantage of the expertise to improve the cost effectiveness and timeliness of our evaluation and demonstration program under the bill.

Both the chairman of our subcommittee and our ranking member [Mr. FIELDS] have indicated a willingness to learn more about the Navy's research program and the technologies which have been developed. Thus, I am certain that as H.R. 3360 moves from the House to the Senate that we can anticipate the incorporation of language either in the bill or in reports which would direct the task force to confer with the Navy and its contractors in building upon their research in this important field.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3360, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to demonstrate ballast water management technologies, and practices on vessels, including vessel modification and design, that will prevent aquatic nonindigenous species from being introduced and spread in United States waters."

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECREATIONAL BOATING SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1994

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3786) to amend title 46, United States Code, to establish requirements to ensure safe operation of recreational vessels, to require allocation of State recreational boating safety program assistance based on State adoption of laws regarding boating while intoxicated, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 3786

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Recreational Boating Safety Improvement Act of 1994".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, recreational boating safety is one of those areas where legislation Congress passed has actually worked. Since the Federal Boat Safety Act was enacted in 1971, the national recreational boating fatality rate has declined five-fold, from over 20 fatalities per 100,000 boats in 1971 to 4 per 100,000 in 1992.

However, a recent National Transportation Safety Board [NTSB] study of recreational boating accidents identified several areas where more could be done. For example, over half of all boating accidents involve alcohol and only nine States have comprehensive boating-while-intoxicated laws. Second, 85 percent of the persons who drowned in boating accidents were not wearing lifejackets. Third, no more than 22 percent of first time boat operators have taken even a basic boating safety course. Finally the NTSB found that accident reporting is poor and that the reports submitted are incomplete.

This bill addresses these four problems. First, to increase the use of personal floatation devices, the bill requires children 12 years old and under to wear lifejackets on the open deck of vessels 26 feet or less in length. Second, to reduce boating accidents involving alcohol, the bill provides financial incentives for States to adopt comprehensive boating-while-intoxicated laws. Third, to improve the safety record of boaters, the bill requires boat operators who are convicted of drunk boating or negligent operations to take a Coast Guard-approved boating safety course. Finally, to improve accident reporting, the bill establishes a penalty for boaters who do not report accidents to appropriate State officials.

This is a good bill. It enjoys the support of the boating public, and I urge all Members to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3786, the Recreational Boating Safety Improvement Act of 1994. This bill contains the most important requirements of my bill, H.R. 2812, the Recreational Boating Safety Act of 1993.

I am pleased that the House is acting on this important legislation today, and I hope that the President will have an opportunity to sign the bill into law before the summer boating season. I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee for his cooperation and hard work in expediting consideration of this important piece of legislation.

Boating deaths are the second-largest category of transportation fatalities, exceeded only by highway deaths. Alcohol is a contributing factor in at least half of all boating accidents. Nearly 85 percent of all persons who drown in recreational boating accidents are not wearing lifejackets, and only 37 States require individuals aboard recreational vessels to wear lifejackets.

I believe that we must act now to require our children to wear lifejackets to protect them from drowning in boating accidents. H.R. 3786 requires children 12 years and younger to wear a lifejacket or other Coast Guard-approved floatation device aboard recreational vessels under 26 feet in length. Second, we must crack down on violators of boating-while-intoxicated [BWI] laws, and encourage the States to enact tougher BWI laws. H.R. 3786 requires individuals who commit serious boating law violations to take a boating safety course, and provides $10 million in additional boating safety funds for States that enact tough BWI laws.

One of the most important safety issues not mentioned in this bill concerns the approval of fully inflatable lifejackets by the Coast Guard. I will be following the Coast Guard's action on fully inflatables in the future to ensure that the Coast Guard has made satisfactory progress toward approval of fully inflatable lifejackets for use by the boating public.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the President has proposed to cut the State boating safety grant program as part of his fiscal year 1995 budget. That program is fully funded by the fuel taxes paid by recreational boaters, and it is wrong to ask recreational boaters to pay the tax without the benefits of State boating safety programs.

I think that we should spend more, not less, of the fuel tax paid by recreational boaters for the important boating safety purpose for which it is collected. Boating safety should be a Coast Guard priority, and targeting more fuel tax dollars in this area will ensure that boating safety issues get the attention they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will save lives and reduce the number of injuries that occur on America's waterways each year. H.R. 3786 has been endorsed by the American Academy of Pediatrics, the National Association of State Boating Law Administrators, and the National Marine Manufacturers Association. I urge my colleagues to vote "aye" on this important legislation.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the passage of H.R. 3786, the Recreational Boating Safety Improvement Act of 1994, as amended. I introduced H.R. 3786 after combining the most important provisions of two previous bills which I and the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Honorable JACK FIELDS of Texas, introduced last year to improve recreational boating safety.

I would also like to thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Honorable GERRY STUDDS, for his leadership, endorsement, and prompt consideration of H.R. 3786. This comprehensive, bipartisan bill is the result of a concerted effort by many organizations involved in boating safety to improve Federal laws and funding.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3786 will create a Federal requirement for the mandatory wearing of lifejackets for children, encourage States to adopt important boating-while-intoxicated laws, require the Secretary of Transportation to submit a plan to increase the reporting of vessel accidents to State law enforcement officials, and require boating safety violators to take a boating safety course.

Boating can be a safe and enjoyable experience if certain minimum steps are taken, such as requiring lifejackets for children and having general boating safety knowledge. In July 1993, a boating accident occurred in Arkansas which tragically illustrated the problem. Five of the seven victims were children ranging in age from 18 months to 10 years, none of whom were wearing lifejackets. Lifejackets could have saved these innocent lives.

H.R. 3786 will significantly improve the ability of States and the Coast Guard to protect the safety of thousands of Americans who enjoy boating on our Nation's waterways, such as children who are often less skilled, physically and emotionally immature, and generally unable to care for themselves. As a strong supporter of boating safety, I am confident that passage of this new legislation will save countless children's lives, take drunk boaters off the water, provide for better accident reporting, and educate those who violate our boating safety laws.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3786, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING BOUNDARIES OF THE FLOWER GARDEN BANKS NATIONAL MARINE SANCTUARY

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3886) to amend the boundaries of the Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary, as amended.

H.R. 3886

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FLOWER GARDEN BANKS BOUNDARY MODIFICATION.

(a) MODIFICATION.—Notwithstanding section 304 of the National Marine Sanctuaries Act (16 U.S.C. 1434), the boundaries of the Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary, as designated by Public Law 102-251, are amended to include the area described in subsection (d), popularly known as Stetson Bank. This area shall be part of the Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary and shall be managed and regulated as though it had been designated by the Secretary of Commerce under the National Marine Sanctuaries Act.

(b) DEPICTION OF SANCTUARY BOUNDARIES.—The Secretary of Commerce shall—

(1) prepare a chart depicting the boundaries of the Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary, as modified by this section; and

(2) submit copies of this chart to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3886 amends the boundaries of the Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary to include a small area known as Stetson Bank.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ORTIZ] who admirably serves as the chairman of our Oceanography Subcommittee, was the sponsor of the original legislation that established Flower Garden Banks as a national marine sanctuary. He introduced H.R. 3886 to provide the same protection for Stetson Bank by making it a part of the sanctuary. He is to be commended for both actions.

This sanctuary was established in 1992 to protect the northernmost coral reef on the U.S. continental shelf. A nearby area, Stetson Bank, is a three-quarter square mile shoal know for a spectacular array of marine life. However, damage to that marine life from anchoring, shell collecting, and spearfishing led to calls from scientists and the sport diving community to protect the area.

This bill provides that protection. This is a wise, cost-effective effort to protect vital marine resources in the Gulf of Mexico and I urge the House to adopt this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this bill introduced by my friend and colleague, chairman SOLOMON ORTIZ.

The bill expands the boundaries of the Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary, located approximately 110 miles offshore Galveston, TX, to include Stetson Bank. The Stetson Bank area is part of the northernmost coral reef in the continental shelf of North America. It is blanketed with hard corals, sponges, 253 known invertebrate species, and its is home for scores of tropical fish, giant sea turtles, hammerhead sharks, and manta rays.

This abundant sea life is an important underwater ecosystem but, regrettably, in recent years certain irresponsible individuals have inflicted great harm on these marine resources. Although mooring buoys are installed in the bank, corals and sponges are being crushed by anchors from large vessels using nearby shipping channels. Spearfishing is decimating the fish populations and coral is being removed by divers.

In recognition of this growing problem, forward-thinking Gulf of Mexico diving groups, as well as the manager of the Flower Garden Banks Sanctuary, believe that folding this .75-acre site into the existing sanctuary would effectively protect these resources for future generations. Stetson Bank has been designed by the Minerals Management Service as a no activity zone, and the area is not used by commercial fishermen. I know of no opposition to this measure, and Chairman ORTIZ should be commended for his ongoing and outstanding leadership in seeking to protect the Stetson Bank.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this measure and hope that we will be able to have it enacted before the diving season begins this summer to afford Stetson Bank the full protection of the law.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3886 amends the boundaries of the Flower Garden Banks Marine Sanctuary to include a nearby bank known as Stetson Bank. The Flower Garden Banks Sanctuary was established by Congress in 1992 and has been a model for the entire National Marine Sanctuary Program.

The Sanctuary Program has demonstrated our ability to preserve and protect valuable marine resources, such as the coral reefs of the Flower Garden Banks, while sustaining the important multiple uses of the surrounding marine environment.

H.R. 3886 will add to the existing sanctuary a small coral bank of less than 1 square mile known as Stetson Bank. This bank is renown for its spectacular array of fish and invertebrates and is a common destination for scuba divers.

However, its value has caused it to come under increasing pressure from anchor damage, spearfishing, and shell collectors. In response, local scientists and sport diving groups have led an effort to put the bank under protection.

Including Stetson Bank within the sanctuary boundary will place the bank under the existing sanctuary management plan. This will provide the same protections for Stetson Bank as are in place for the existing Flower Gardens Bank Sanctuary.

These protections will ensure that the valuable resources of Stetson Bank are preserved and that the bank will continue to be a popular site for the recreational dive industry.

Mr. Speaker, I especially want to thank Chairman STUDDS and the ranking member, Mr. FIELDS, and their respective staffs for all the help they have provided on this matter.

I believe this is a small but significant piece of legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3886, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1394 was introduced by Mr. STUPAK to establish, within the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA], a Great Lakes Office in the Washington, DC area.

One may ask why a Great Lakes Office in Washington, DC? Would not Kalamazoo be better? In a word, no. The purpose of this office would be to promote and coordinate activities of national programs that conduct research, monitoring, and environmental assessment in the Great Lakes region. These programs at NOAA and other agencies are managed from the national capitol area. The bill also requires an annual report to Congress on NOAA activities in the Great Lakes.

This bill unanimously passed the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee last week, and I urge the House to adopt it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in qualified support of this bill.

While I concede that the Great Lakes are a tremendous national and international resource—almost on a par with the Gulf of Mexico—I do not feel that a Washington, DC-based regional office to coordinate and promote the Great Lakes work of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] is necessary.

When Congressman Bob Davis introduced an identical measure in 1991, I understand he was expressing his frustration that NOAA had failed to establish a Great Lakes Research Office as required under section 118 of the Clean Water Act. However, NOAA established this office in January 1993, at the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory in Ann Arbor. Therefore, the need for the office is much less pressing.

I also question the costs involved. The President's fiscal year 1995 budget cuts NOAA's coastal and ocean programs significantly. In fact, two programs specific to the Great Lakes, the Great Lakes Environmental Research Laboratory and the National Sea Grant College zebra mussel initiative, are sliced by over $3.6 million. I think our first priority is to restore these programs and ensure that valuable research, environmental assessment, and navigation aids continue in the Great Lakes. The money would be better spent there than on desks and paper clips in Washington, DC.

However, the version of the bill reported from the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee is much improved. It leaves to the NOAA Administrator the decision to establish a Great Lakes Office. This is an appropriate exercise of executive authority. In addition, the detailed NOAA Great Lakes report to Congress is now subject to appropriations and limited to 4 years. Given the proliferation of reporting requirements, and NOAA's spotty track record for producing timely and useful reports, I believe these are fair limitations.

With these changes, I ask my colleagues to support H.R. 1394 as reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1394, a bill to improve the coordination of National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration Great Lakes activities. I would like to thank the House leadership, as well as Chairmen ORTIZ and STUDDS, for moving expeditiously to have this bill considered in the Subcommittee on Oceanography, the full Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and finally on the floor of the House.

H.R. 1394 would create a Washington, DC,-based NOAA Great Lakes office to coordinate and promote Great Lakes activities within NOAA. The creation of such an office would improve NOAA's credibility with the Great Lakes scientific and resource management communities and provide a much needed focus on the unique aquatic environmental problems confronting the Great Lakes. Other agencies such as the Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service have such coordinating offices for the Great Lakes. Given NOAA's important role in the basin, I believe the creation of such an office is long overdue.

The Great Lakes region faces a number of important challenges which require direct attention. These problems include toxic pollution of the water, contaminated sediments, fish and wildlife abnormalities, fluctuating water levels, and the infestation of exotic aquatic species such as sea lamprey, zebra mussels and the European ruffe.

The moneys associated with this proposal are minimal and the benefits that would result from enactment of this bill are substantial. Mr. Speaker, it is time for the Great Lakes to receive the attention they deserve. I urge the House to pass H.R. 1394 and allow NOAA to more efficiently tackle the problems that confront the Great Lakes.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1394, the NOAA Great Lakes Improvement Act, authorizes NOAA to establish a Great Lakes office in Washington. The purpose of this office would be to promote and coordinate Federal research, monitoring, and assessment work in the Great Lakes region. The bill also directs NOAA to submit to Congress an annual report providing information relating to Great Lakes ecosystem research, monitoring, and assessment.

I have worked closely on this matter with the author of the bill, Mr. STUPAK, and I want to commend the gentleman for his spirit of cooperation in this regard, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1394, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

H.R. 2063

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

"(g) The Institute shall report to the Congress on its activities annually, and shall report to the Secretary of Commerce in a like manner biennially.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2063 was introduced by our colleague, Ms. FURSE, to fine tune the mission of the National Coastal Resources Research and Development Institute [NCRI]. Since 1984, NCRI has supported research, education, and technology transfer to promote the responsible development of coastal resources.

The bill seeks to emphasize the role of the Institute in promoting the economic and environmental well-being of coastal communities through research and technology transfer. NCRI currently is overseen by a Board of Governors that represents only Pacific coastal States. H.R. 2063 requires a Board with representation from all the coastal regions of the United States, making the program truly national in scope. In addition, the bill improves oversight of the Institute by adding a requirement for it to report annually to Congress on its activities.

Let me emphasize that we are not creating a new program here; we are simply making improvements to an existing one. The Institute has done fine work in Massachusetts and around the country. The bill is not controversial and I urge the House to support its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, while I will not object to H.R. 2063, I must admit that I remain unconvinced as to the justification and overall need for the National Coastal Resources Research and Development Institute.

In the last ten years, the Institute has kept a low profile, funding small projects which took basic coastal research conducted under other Federal programs and applying it in the real world, with an emphasis on economic invigoration of our coasts. The program has been criticized, though, as lacking a clear focus and restricting its funds to the Pacific Northwest.

Therefore, I applaud the changes stipulated in Congresswoman FURSE's bill. H.R. 2063 reconstitutes the Board of Governors, which sets the policies of the Institute and gives final approval of any projects, to include representatives from nine coastal regions. Current Board membership is limited to six persons appointed by the Governors of Alaska, California, Hawaii, Oregon, and Washington. This change recognizes that the program is a national one despite its Oregon base. I know that the Institute has funded several recent aquaculture and tourism projects in Gulf States, although unfortunately none were located in Texas. It is my hope that with a seat on the Board, this can be remedied in the future.

I also support two other changes to the existing program made by H.R. 2063. The first tightens the language setting forth the purposes of the Institute to emphasize the need for economic growth of coastal communities and improving the competitiveness of coastal businesses. These are areas now overlooked by Federal research and development programs, and clearly differentiate the Institute's role in coastal issues from that of the National Sea Grant College Program.

The second brings coastal community and business leaders into the Advisory Council, which advises the Board of Governors on funding proposals. Because the focus of the Institute's program is really on real-world coastal economic development, these are the people who really should be involved in the decision-making process, rather than those from the academic field who now make up the Council.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the bill's adoption and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Oregon, [Ms. FURSE], for a brief and concise statement by the author of the bill.

Ms. FURSE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my sincere appreciation to Chairman STUDDS and Chairman ORTIZ for their assistance in guiding this important piece of legislation through committee and bringing it to the House floor.

The subject of H.R. 2063 is the National Coastal Resources Research and Development Institute, more commonly referred to as NCRI. Created by Congress in 1984, NCRI's mission is to help strengthen and diversify coastal economies through partnerships between local businesses and the scientific community. My bill will expand and strengthen the work of this important Institute.

Since its creation, NCRI has invested more than $6 million in 81 projects throughout 25 coastal States. These projects apply and evaluate innovative technologies and economic strategies in a aquaculture, business and community development, coastal tourism and recreation, commercial fisheries, and marine and seafood technology and product development. Examples of NCRI projects along Oregon's coast include creating a spring chinook fishery in Young's Bay, using new approaches for water front revitalization in Warrenton, creating new products from Pacific whiting, and advancing a new, cost effective welding technology for ship repair. NCRI has been similarly useful elsewhere in the coastal United States, through such projects as the evaluation of harvesting techniques needed to support a sustainable urchin fishery in the Gulf of Maine, the creation of a self-sustaining tourism marketing program for rural Louisiana communities, and the development of a management framework for the Chesapeake Bay aquaculture industry.

Extrapolating from those past successes, every dollar invested in NCRI can be expected to yield an estimated $400 increase in coastal revenues within a 10 to 15 year period. In this time of tight budgets, that's the kind of cost effective assistance businesses and communities want and need.

I introduced H.R. 2063, the National Coastal Resources Development Act of 1993, last May to strengthen and broaden the services that NCRI provides. Specifically, my bill will clarify the Institute's mission: broaden its Board of Directors to include a more national membership; expand its advisory Council to include coastal community leaders and businesses; direct NCRI to report periodically to Congress and the Secretary of Commerce on its activities; and make several technical corrections.

By making these changes, H.R. 2063 will allow NCRI to more effectively accomplish its important mission throughout all of coastal America.

Today's consideration of H.R. 2063 is very timely—last week we received the devastating news that there will not be any commercial salmon fishery season this year along the northern Oregon and Washington coastline due to our rapidly dwindling salmon populations. This is particularly bad news when our coastal communities are already struggling to cope with ongoing cutbacks in the fishing and timber industries. I know the Northwest experience is not unique and that other coastal regions are facing similar declines in their fisheries. More than ever, our coastal communities need the assistance that programs like NCRI's can provide—to help them diversify their economies, adopt innovative technologies and develop new products.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting NCRI's work and our Nation's coastal businesses and residents by voting "yes" for H.R. 2063.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2063, the National Coastal Resources Development Act amends existing law relating to the National Coastal Resources Research and Development Institute. The Institute provides grants to transfer marine research and technology to the commercial sector.

The bill clarifies the Institute's mission and expands the membership of the Board of Governors and the Advisory Council. The effect of the bill is to make the Institute more national in scope by having a Board of Governors with nationwide membership.

I think that H.R. 2063 is a good bill. I congratulate my colleague from Oregon, Ms. FURSE, for her efforts in this regard, and I urge the House to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. FURSE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my sincere appreciation to Chairman Studds and Chairman Ortiz for their assistance in guiding this important piece of legislation through committee and bringing it to the House floor.

The subject of H.R. 2063 is the National Coastal Resources Research and Development Institute, more commonly referred to as NCRI. Created by Congress in 1984, NCRI's mission is to help strengthen and diversify coastal economies through partnerships between local businesses and the scientific community. My bill will expand and strengthen the work of this important Institute.

Since its creation, NCRI has invested more than $6 million in 81 projects throughout 25 coastal States. Based on a competitive review process, NCRI funds projects which apply and evaluate innovative technologies and economic strategies in a aquaculture, business and community development, coastal tourism and recreation, commercial fisheries, and marine and seafood technology and product development. Examples of NCRI projects along Oregon's coast include creating a spring chinook fishery in Young's Bay, using new approaches for waterfront revitalization in Warrenton, creating new products from Pacific whiting, and advancing a new, cost effective welding technology for ship repair. I introduced H.R. 2063, the National Coastal Resources Development Act of 1993, last May to strengthen and broaden the services that NCRI provides. Specifically, my bill will:

Clarify the Institute's mission;

Broaden its Board of Directors to include a more national membership;

Expand its Advisory Council to include coastal community leaders and businesses;

Direct NCRI to report periodically to Congress and the Secretary of Commerce on its activities; and Make several technical corrections.

By making these changes, H.R. 2063 will allow NCRI to more effectively accomplish its important mission throughout all of coastal America.

NCRI's program is unique. While other Federal programs, such as the National Sea Grant Program's Marine Advisory Service, fund applied marine research projects, NCRI is the only program that takes new laboratory-developed technologies and evaluates their commercial feasibility in a real world setting through partnerships with private industry and scientists. NCRI is practical and result-oriented where other programs are only theoretical.

Today's consideration of H.R. 2063 is very timely—last week we received the devastating news that there will not be any commercial salmon fishery season this year along the northern Oregon and Washington coastline due to our rapidly dwindling salmon populations. This is particularly bad news when our coastal communities are already struggling to cope with ongoing cutbacks in the fishing and timber industries. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting NCRI's work and our Nation's coastal businesses and residents by voting yes for H.R. 2063.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2063.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYING TO THE STATE OF MINNESOTA THE NEW LONDON NATIONAL FISH HATCHERY PRODUCTION FACILITY

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3664) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Minnesota the New London National Fish Hatchery production facility.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3664

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONVEYANCE OF NEW LONDON NATIONAL FISH HATCHERY PRODUCTION FACILITY.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law and within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall convey to the State of Minnesota without reimbursement all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the property comprising New London National Fish Hatchery production facility, located outside of downtown New London, Minnesota, including—

(1) all easements and water rights relating to the property, and

(2) all land, improvements, and related personal property comprising that production facility.

(b) USE OF PROPERTY.—All property and interests conveyed under this section shall be used by the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources for the fishery resources management program.

(c) REVERSIONARY INTEREST.—All right, title, and interest in and to all property and interests conveyed under this section shall revert to the United States on any date on which any of the property or interests are used other than for the Minnesota fishery resources management program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3664, introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MINGE] directs the Secretary of the Interior to convey ownership of the New London National Fish Hatchery in New London, MN, to the State of Minnesota.

The hatchery is part of the National Fish Hatchery Program of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Its primary function is to raise sportfish, like walleye, bass, channel catfish, and muskie—and I don't mean Ed—for State stocking programs. Although considered a part of the Federal program, New London Hatchery operations have been funded and administered by the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources since 1983 at a cost of $75,000 a year. Once the property has been transferred, the State would continue to assume these costs as well as the costs of any repairs or upgrades to the facility that may be necessary, resulting in a cost savings to the Federal Government.

Should the State decide at some time in the future that it no longer wants or needs to operate the hatchery or wants to use the facility for some other purpose, ownership of the facility and the land would revert back to the Federal Government.

The bill is supported by both the State of Minnesota and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and I urge Members to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, while the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee has not held any hearings on H.R. 3664, I have no objection to this legislation.

This bill would transfer the title of the New London National Fish Hatchery facility from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to the State of Minnesota's Department of Natural Resources. The legislation conveys all rights, title, and interest of the United States to the State of Minnesota. This includes all property, buildings, water rights, and easements of the New London facility.

It is my understanding that the hatchery has been operated by the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources for the Fish and Wildlife Service under a memorandum of agreement [MOA] since 1983. This MOA, which was extended in 1993, expires in 1998.

The hatchery facility is actually located on two separate pieces of land. One is located outside the town of New London and is owned by the Fish and Wildlife Service. The other is located within the town of New London; the State had owned the property but transferred it to the Fish and Wildlife Service in 1939.

Finally, the bill stipulates that this property will revert back to the Federal Government if the State of Minnesota decides it no longer wishes to operate the property as a fishery resource management facility.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Fish and Wildlife Service supports this transfer, and that this transfer would actually save the Federal Government money.

Mr. MINGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3664, a bill to transfer ownership of the New London National Fish Hatchery production facility to the State of Minnesota.

In 1983, the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources began leasing the New London facility from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. In doing so, the State of Minnesota assumed responsibility for all operational costs, maintenance, and liability. However, without legal ownership of the fish hatchery, the State was limited in its ability to make needed improvements. In fact, no major maintenance or upgrades to the production facility have been made in 10 years. The transfer of this fish production facility to Minnesota will allow the State to make necessary fish culture improvements, conduct annual maintenance as needed, and ultimately improve the quality of Minnesota's fisheries program.

The passage today of this needed legislation will be a good example of how State and Federal Government can cut through bureaucratic gridlock and get work done.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3664.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TITLE III—WALTER B. JONES CENTER FOR THE SOUNDS AT THE POCOSIN LAKES NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE

SEC. 301. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) The Pocosin Lakes National Wildlife Refuge, located in northeastern North Carolina, provides unique opportunities for observing and interpreting the biological richness of the region's estuaries and wetlands.

(2) Although there are 10 national wildlife refuges in eastern North Carolina, not one has an educational or interpretative center for visitors.

(3) The State of North Carolina, Tyrrell County, the town of Columbia, the Conservation Fund, and private citizens have proposed to enter into a partnership with the United States Fish and Wildlife Service to establish an educational and interpretative facility to be known as the Center for the Sounds.

(4) Establishment of the Center for the Sounds would bestow economic benefits upon Tyrrell County and the town of Columbia.

(5) The Federal Government has designated the Albemarle-Pamlico estuary system of northeastern North Carolina as an estuary of national concern.

(6) Throughout his congressional career, the Honorable Walter B. Jones was a strong supporter of the National Wildlife Refuge System.

(7) During his years of service in the House of Representatives, Walter B. Jones supported the establishment and expansion of National Wildlife Refuges in eastern North Carolina; these include 6 new National Wildlife Refuges established in his district, including the Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge and the Pocosin Lakes National Wildlife Refuge, which are respectively the third largest and fifth largest National Wildlife Refuges east of the Mississippi River.

(8) Walter B. Jones helped increase refuge acreage in his district by over 303,000 acres, thus ensuring the protection of these lands for wildlife habitat and public recreation.

(9) Walter B. Jones' support for reintroducing endangered red wolves into the wild at Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge was a major factor in securing public acceptance of, and support for, this first successful effort to reintroduce endangered predators into formerly occupied habitat.

(10) Walter B. Jones devoted much of his congressional career, including his years as Chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, to the conservation of fish and wildlife, for the benefit of the Nation and the people of North Carolina.

(11) Walter B. Jones should most appropriately be recognized for his work on behalf of fish and wildlife conservation by having the Center for the Sounds at the Pocosin Lakes National Wildlife Refuge System named in his honor.

SEC. 302. AUTHORITY TO CONSTRUCT AND OPERATE FACILITY.

The Secretary of the Interior may, subject to the availability of appropriations, construct and operate a facility at the Pocosin Lakes National Wildlife Refuge in Tyrrell County, North Carolina, which shall be known as the "Walter B. Jones Center for the Sounds", for the following purposes:

(1) Providing public opportunities, facilities, and resources to study the natural history and natural resources of northeastern North Carolina.

(2) Offering a variety of environmental educational programs and interpretive exhibits.

(3) Fostering an awareness and understanding of the interactions among wildlife, estuarine and wetland ecosystems, and human activities.

(4) Providing office space and facilities for refuge administration, research, education, and related activities.

SEC. 303. DESIGN.

The Secretary of the Interior shall ensure that the design, size, and location of a facility constructed under this title are consistent with the cultural and natural history of the area with which the facility will be concerned.

SEC. 304. COST SHARING.

The Secretary of the Interior may accept contributions of funds from non-Federal sources to pay the costs of operating and maintaining the facility authorized under this title, and shall take appropriate steps to seek to obtain such contributions.

SEC. 305. REPORT.

Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall submit a report to the Congress on progress made in designing and constructing a facility under this title, including steps taken under section 304 to obtain contributions and any such contributions that have been pledged to or received by the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of S. 476, the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation Improvement Act of 1994.

Since it was established by legislation from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in 1984, the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation has funded almost 800 conservation projects in literally every corner of our Nation. By using a partnership approach, $90 million worth of conservation projects have been funded with only $28 million in Federal appropriations.

This bill applies the adage, "if it ain't broke, don't fix it." It makes only minor changes to this legislation: it expands the Foundation's Board of Directors from 9 members to 15; it gives explicit authority for the Foundation to work with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration on marine conservation projects; and it authorizes Federal appropriations at the current level of $25 million per year for the next 5 years.

This bill also contains two other provisions. It authorizes the establishment of the Brownsville Wetlands Policy Center at the Port of Brownsville and directs the Secretary of the Interior to convey the Senecaville National Fish Hatchery to the State of Ohio. All of these provisions are identical to those contained in H.R. 2684, which overwhelmingly passed the House by a vote of 368 to 59 on November 3, last year. However, it does not include the section that authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to construct and operate the Walter B. Jones Center for the Sounds in North Carolina. The amendment that we are sending back to the Senate includes the Walter B. Jones Center which I understand has now been cleared in the other body.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill would enhance fish and wildlife research and management. I urge the Members to continue their strong support for these goals and pass this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 476, a bill to reauthorize and improve the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation. I would note that this bill was adopted by the House in November 1993.

When legislation establishing the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation was adopted by this House almost a decade ago, we were all hopeful that the Foundation would be successful in forming partnerships to improve our country's ability to conserve our natural resources. I doubt any of us expected it to be as successful as it has been.

The Foundation has done an outstanding job of combining federally appropriated funds with private contributions. Since its creation in 1984, the Foundation has achieved a match ratio of between $2 to $4 for every Federal dollar appropriated. This has resulted in more than 873 grants, worth more than $108 million, for conservation projects throughout the United States and in 16 other countries.

We are all aware of the need to prioritize Federal spending. This legislation provides us with the opportunity to reauthorize a program that is exemplary in its use of Federal money and serves the valuable functions of promoting habitat conservation, environmental education, and natural resources management.

Under the terms of this legislation, the Fish and Wildlife Foundation would be reauthorized for 5 years at its current authorization level and their Board of Directors would be increased from 9 to 15 members.

Mr. Speaker, I also support the committee amendment to the bill. The language adds to the text a non-controversial fish and wildlife bill recognizing the years of service of the late Walter B. Jones of North Carolina. This language was previously adopted by the House, but inadvertently dropped by the Senate. This amendment corrects this situation.

Mr. Speaker, I support the adoption of this important legislation and urge my colleagues to support this bill as well.

Mr. Speaker, if I could, I would also like to point out to my colleagues that we on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries feel that we serve as an example to the House where Members of disparate ideologies and different philosophies can sit down and work with reason and promote and pass good and sound pieces of legislation, which we have done today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to heartily second the observations of my distinguished ranking member, and also add that the provisions with regard to our late colleague, Walter Jones, have now been cleared of their previously inexplicable hurdle in the Senate, and I think the bill is now on its way. And once again I echo the very warm remarks of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Speaker, I support S. 476, a bill to reauthorize the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation. It also authorizes the Walter B. Jones Center for the Sounds at the Pocosin Lakes National Wildlife Refuge in eastern North Carolina.

Walter B. Jones was our former colleague and chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to construct and operate the Walter B. Jones Center for the Sounds, which will serve as the headquarters for the Pocosin Lakes National Wildlife Refuge in Tyrrell County in eastern North Carolina.

This center will provide public opportunities and facilities so that children and adults may study the region's natural history and resources. It will offer environmental education programs and exhibits, and it will provide office space for the operation of the refuge. Any Federal spending will be subject to future appropriations, but we anticipate significant cost-sharing between the Department of the Interior and local and State governments. The exact cost of the center is not certain, although previous centers of this type have cost in the range of $2 million to $5 million. After the center is designed, we will be able to determine its cost more exactly.

Congressman Jones introduced in the 102d Congress legislation which would establish this center, but unfortunately, his death in 1992 intervened before it could be enacted. It was amended that year so that the center would become a memorial to him, and it subsequently was passed in the House of Representatives, but there was no action in the Senate before adjournment. This Congress, I introduced H.R. 2961, and it was approved by the House on September 21 by a vote of 425–0. Subsequently, similar language was included in H.R. 2684 which was approved by the House on November 3 by a vote of 368–59. So, during the 103d Congress, the House has already approved this language twice.

Walter B. Jones was chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for 12 years, but served on the committee for the entire 26 years of this career in Congress. He was an especially strong advocate for the National Wildlife Refuge System and during this term in Congress the Pocosin Lakes National Wildlife Refuge and several other refuges were established in his district. Over 303,000 acres in his district were added to refuges, in the then First District of North Carolina. Now, much of that lies within my district, the Third District.

There are 10 national wildlife refuges in eastern North Carolina, but not one has a visitors' center or educational facility.

The Pocosin Lakes Refuge was established with over 110,000 acres but through a land donation from the Conservation Fund, so that no Federal funds to this point have gone into acquisition of lands for this refuge.

This acreage extends over a wide area in parts of three counties, in one of the poorest regions of North Carolina. These counties, along with others in the region, have formed a consortium called the Partnership for the Sounds, to develop ecotourism as a draw to that region and as a source of economic growth for the region.

While many counties object to taking property out of their tax base to establish wildlife refuges, Tyrrell County, where the bulk of this wildlife refuge is located, has enthusiastically embraced wildlife refuges and the role that they in ecotourism. Officials there are pursuing a strategy to put that small county on the map as a center for study of ecology and the coastal estuaries and streams of eastern North Carolina. The Fish and Wildlife Service needs to recognize and reward such a positive attitude by the local officials. Establishment of the Center for the Sounds would do so.

We believe this is important legislation that will not only honor our former colleague and friend, Walter B. Jones, but will serve as an important educational tool for the people who will visit this region, and also as a headquarters for the refuge.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, 3 years ago, I began to search for a legislative vehicle which would accomplish three basic objectives: to expand educational opportunities for young Hispanics; to study ways to preserve the delicate wetlands environment, particularly around industrial complexes along the border; and to find actual wetlands for scientists and students to examine in conjunction with academic pursuits.

First, I sought out the Port of Brownsville to see if they had an interest in moving forward a project with so many goals in mind. In an act of monumental generosity, the Port committed over 7,000 acres of valuable wetlands property adjacent to the Port Authority industrial complex—land which students and scientists could examine to discover the effects of industry on the fragile ecosystems of the wetlands in south Texas.

I wanted to create a center under which a consortium of colleges and universities could establish programs to provide research, training, and academic classes for minority undergraduate and graduate students in the field of wetlands environmental science, engineering, management, and policy. The natural partner for this enterprise was the University of Texas at Brownsville [UT–B].

From the beginning, we believed that academic institutions and scientists from other countries would become involved in the consortium. The participation of UT–B is important because it is an institution which already has an international component, as well as a student exchange program. Anticipating the passage and implementation of the North American Free-Trade Agreement [NAFTA], I felt that collaboration efforts on the study of wetlands by both the scientific community and the Governments of the United States and Mexico would be especially important.

I introduced the bill we call the Brownsville Wetlands Policy Center Act in the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, on which I serve, in July 1991. It was referred to a variety of committees, and the House did not act on it that year. I introduced a more focused version of the bill in August of 1992, and it was referred only to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. The committee passed the bill quickly, a compliment to all the time and energy of the people who helped develop the foundation for the bill.

In the fall of 1992, the House of Representatives passed the bill. The Senate did not have the opportunity to deal with the bill before Congress adjourned, so I introduced the bill again last year in the new Congress. When it was introduced this time, the only change we made was to make explicit the strength of the commitments by the Port of Brownsville and UT–B in terms of land, educational facilities, personnel, and other costs.

The new administration, particularly the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, was very helpful to me and my staff as we wrote the bill. The Fish and Wildlife Service was anxious both to help with the bill and participate in the science of studying the land. Senator HUTCHISON graciously agreed to sponsor the bill in the Senate, and the help and support of both she and Senator GRAMM guaranteed the congressional passage of this bill.

The Brownsville Wetlands Policy Center Act was eventually wrapped into a larger bill which incorporated a number of noncontroversial proposals approved by the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee—National Fish and Wildlife Foundation Improvement Act of 1993—and passed by the House in November 1993. The Senate passed the bill in March of this year, and it will be signed shortly by the President and become law.

The scope and the importance of the bill have grown since the passage of NAFTA. As more people show a genuine interest in preserving or cleaning up the environment in an age when our economic interests demand it, the Brownsville Wetlands Policy Center Act is a bold step in taking the lead to discover how best to accomplish that end. The field of environmental engineering has expanded for Hispanics, many of whom probably never thought that breaking into the field would be a matter of timing centered on international economic policy.

But with the attention of the Nation touching occasionally on environmental policy during the heat of the NAFTA debate, those of us who live along the international border with Mexico have a prime opportunity to create a better climate for improving the conditions of those who live here. Hispanics, particularly those who have lived along the border, have a firsthand knowledge of the language, customs, and traditions of their Mexican counterparts similarly involved in the study and improvement of the border environment.

This center will accomplish all the original purposes we set out to achieve—it will expand educational opportunities for young Hispanics; it will enable the study and preservation of the wetlands environment close to industrial complexes along the border; and, most importantly, it provides actual wetlands as an outdoor laboratory resource for scientists and students to examine in an industrial setting. This center, I believe, will attract scientists from all over the world to Brownsville for the study of wetlands preservation.

I am proud of what the good people of south Texas can do when we put our minds to it. I thank the Port of Brownsville, UT–B, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Senators HUTCHISON and GRAMM, Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee Chairman GERRY STUDDS, Democrat of Massachusetts, and Congressman JACK FIELDS, Republican of Texas, the ranking minority member of the committee—all of whom were a great help in crafting the bill. But most of all, I thank the people in the community who saw a need, designed a solution, then saw it through to the end. The rewards of this endeavor will benefit the valley, and the rest of the border area, for a very long time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 476, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to reauthorize and amend the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation Establishment Act, and for other purposes.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the several bills just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

NEW JERSEY COASTAL HERITAGE TRAIL ROUTE AUTHORIZATION

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 1574) to authorize appropriations for the Coastal Heritage Trail Route in the State of New Jersey; and for other purposes.

"(2) Funds appropriated pursuant to this subsection to carry out the purposes of this Act shall be used solely for technical assistance and the design and fabrication of interpretive materials, devices and signs. In addition to the limitation on funds contained in subsection (a), no funds made available under this subsection shall be used for operation, maintenance, repair or construction except for construction of interpretive exhibits.

"(3) The Federal share of any project carried out with funds appropriated pursuant to this subsection may not exceed 50 percent of the total cost for that project and shall be provided on a matching basis. The non-Federal share of such cost may be in the form of cash, materials or in-kind services fairly valued by the Secretary.

"(c) The authorities provided to the Secretary under this Act shall terminate five years after the date of enactment of this subsection.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, S. 1574, which passed the Senate on November 20, 1993, is a bill sponsored by Senator BRADLEY to raise the authorization ceiling for the New Jersey Coastal Heritage Trail Route. An identical bill (H.R. 3377) was introduced on the House side by Representative BILL HUGHES.

In 1988, legislation was enacted to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to designate the New Jersey Coastal Heritage Trail Route to enhance the public's understanding and appreciation of the New Jersey coast and its heritage. This vehicular tour route extends 275 miles along existing public roads from Perth Amboy in the north to Cape May in the south and northwest along the Delaware Bay shoreline. The National Park Service recently completed an implementation guide which presents the strategy for developing the trail route. The 1988 legislation limited the Federal financial contribution to $250,000 for this project. However, that amount has been exceeded and no additional funds can be appropriated unless the authorization is amended.

The Committee on Natural Resources adopted an amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 1574 which made several changes in the bill to address concerns about the scope and cost of this project. The committee amendment limits future appropriations to $1 million in addition to the $1.2 million that has already been appropriated. Second, it limits the use of funds to those intended by the original legislation which are technical assistance for planning and for the design and construction of interpretive exhibits. Third, it requires that Federal funds be matched in the form of cash, materials, or in-kind services from non-Federal sources. The original legislation envisioned a partnership approach for developing the trail route and this match is in keeping with this partnership approach. Finally, the substitute terminates the role of the National Park Service 5 years after the date of enactment.

The substitute amendment provides an appropriate level of involvement for the National Park Service consistent with the original legislation. That legislation envisioned a limited short-term role for the National Park Service and not a permanent ongoing presence. The National Park Service has done a good job in completing an inventory of the natural and cultural resources and drafting an implementation guide for trail route. They will continue to be involved for up to 5 more years but their efforts will phase out and the long-term operation and interpretation should be left up to the State and local entities.

Mr. Speaker, S. 1574, as amended, would provide for a limited but important role for the National Park Service in this project. I urge Members to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 1574.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 1574, the Coastal Heritage Trail Route in the State of New Jersey. I appreciate Chairman VENTO'S efforts on this measure. We were able to agree on significant amendments that will both limit the amounts authorized to be spent over the next 5 years and the purposes for which those funds can be spent. Another very important amendment is the sunset provision, which will terminate the National Park Service's involvement in this project in 5 years from enactment. As the chairman knows, our side of the aisle is concerned about the extent of involvement of the Park Service and Federal dollars in these types of heritage areas.

Mr. Speaker, I urge enactment of S. 1574.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 1574, legislation to reauthorize the New Jersey Coastal Heritage Trail Route. This measure is similar to H.R. 3377, legislation I introduced the House of Representatives last session.

The New Jersey Coastal Heritage Trail was established by an act of Congress in October 1988 that was sponsored in the Senate by my colleague Senator BRADLEY, and in the House by myself, Congressman SAXTON, and our friend, the late Jim Howard. The purpose of that legislation was to highlight the many points of scenic and natural beauty along the New Jersey coast, and to identify sites of historic and cultural interest. In fact, the distinguished chairman of the National Parks Subcommittee, Mr. VENTO, was instrumental in helping that legislation become law.

The trail starts in the north at Sandy Hook and extends south to Cape May, where it swings west into the Delaware Bay region. The trail includes such resources as wildlife refuges, marine mammal sanctuaries, sailing and fishing communities, historic sites and lighthouses, forts and battlefields, national monuments, abandoned shipwrecks, scenic routes, such as Ocean Drive in Cape May County, and entire communities, like Smithville, Salem, Bridgeton, Ocean Grove, and Cape May. Many of these sites are of significance not only to New Jersey, but are part of the national heritage of all Americans.

S. 1574 is more than a simple funding reauthorization. As reported by the Natural Resources Committee, this legislation establishes guidelines that will help direct the project through completion. Although the State of New Jersey has already contributed substantially to the project, this legislation would cement that commitment by requiring that each Federal dollar is matched by State funds or services.

I believe that it is important for my colleagues to note that the trail does not require the acquisition, taking, or purchase of property. Its purpose is to identify the famous, as well as the little-known or underutilized attractions for the benefits of residents and visitors to the State of New Jersey.

Last year, Interior Appropriations Subcommittee Chairman YATES saw fit to include funding for part support in the fiscal year 1994 Interior appropriations legislation. Unfortunately we soon realized that the funding we had asked for exceeded the authorization limit included in the original act. That money was understandably dropped from the final House-passed version of the Interior appropriations legislation due to a lack of authorization. However, the need for funding has only increased since that time.

By approving this legislation we will give the Appropriations Committee the authority to provide the money necessary to help draw well-deserved attention to the points of scenic natural beauty that grace my State, encourage tourism, and build greater public support of the preservation of important and irreplaceable resources. This issue is of great importance to me and the State of New Jersey and I am certain that the small Federal expenditures needed to maintain this trail will be more than compensated by the return to the public.

I would like to thank Chairman VENTO and Mr. HANSEN, as well as Chairman MILLER, and Mr. YOUNG, for moving this legislation expeditiously. Enactment of this bill will assure the continued success of the New Jersey Coastal Heritage Trail which in turn will build greater public support for the identification and preservation of other important cultural, historical, and ecological treasures throughout the country.

I urge my colleagues to pass this measure.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time. I ask for support of the legislation and I yield back the balance of our time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 1574, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASING HIGHWAY AUTHORIZATION FOR CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK IN GEORGIA

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3516) to increase the amount authorized to be appropriated for assistance for highway relocation regarding the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park in Georgia, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3516

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 1(c) of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize and direct the National Park Service to assist the State of Georgia in relocating a highway affecting the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park in Georgia", approved December 24, 1987 (101 Stat. 1442), is amended by striking "$30,000,000" and inserting "$45,000,000".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3516, the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3516, introduced by my colleague on the Natural Resources Committee, Representative NATHAN DEAL, increases the level of funding authorized to assist the State of Georgia in relocating a highway corridor currently crossing the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park. A hearing was held on this measure by the Subcommittee on National Parks, Forests and Public Lands on February 8, 1994, and the Committee on Natural Resources approved H.R. 3516 with an amendment on March 9, 1994.

The park, which was established in 1890, was the first of the national military parks, and has been closely maintained in its original state. Most of the historic road system that existed in 1863 remains largely intact with the exception of LaFayette Road—a crucial artery of the battle which has since become better known as Highway 27, a major north-south commuter route.

Legislation enacted with the 100th Congress (Public Law 100-211) authorized $30 million in Federal funds to assist the State of Georgia in relocating the stretch of highway to an area outside the park, with the Federal contribution totaling 75 percent of the total cost of the project. H.R. 3516, as amended, would increase that amount to $45 million. Since enactment of Public Law 100-211, $23.5 million has been appropriated for the relocation project. The National Park Service, in consultation with the Federal Highway Administration and the Georgia Department of Transportation, now estimates the total cost of the project at $57.5 million, thus the Federal contribution, under the current 75-25 percent cost sharing arrangement, would total $43.2 million. This legislation accommodates the new figures and raises the authorized level to $45 million.

The 3.7 miles of the highway located within the park continues to present a significant impediment to visitor safety and enjoyment of the park, and its increasing use threatens the park's resources. This project is well underway—the planning process is virtually complete. I urge my colleagues to support the increase in authorization so that the bypass can be constructed and the park's resources preserved.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3516, a measure to increase by $15 million the authorization for construction of a highway bypass around Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park.

Chairman VENTO has adequately explained this measure. The need for this project has been identified in the park plan and it is the highest priority construction project at the park.

Construction of this bypass road will have a positive impact on the visitor experience at the park and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEAL], a member of the committee and a sponsor of the bill.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking Mr. VENTO and Mr. MILLER for their continued support for this project. I especially would like to thank my fellow colleague from Georgia, Mr. DARDEN, for his involvement in this project. He and I have a similar interest in this park and bypass in that they were previously in his district and the initial funding was made available through his efforts.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3516. As Mr. VENTO stated, H.R. 3516 is a bill to increase the authorization of appropriations for the National Park Service to assist Georgia in relocating a highway affecting the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park.

The Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park was established in 1890 to commemorate the Civil War military engagements which took place there and to allow opportunities for future study of these historic battles. The park was administered by the War Department until 1933 when jurisdiction was transferred to the National Park Service. In addition to its inspirational and commemorative values, the park is also used for military instruction, although this military activity was substantially curtailed following its transfer to the National Park Service. Today, the Army Command General Staff continues to bring field classes here to study the military strategies used during the battles.

Specifically, this project reroutes a 3.7-mile section of U.S. Highway 27, which passes through the park, by way of a 7-mile-long bypass around the western boundary. This rerouting is necessary to protect the natural and historic resources within the park from damages caused by heavy traffic.

Highway 27 is a major north-south highway through the center of Chickamauga National Military Park connecting Chattanooga, TN to Florida. It is a well traveled commuter route between northwest Georgia and Chattanooga. On average, 16,200 vehicles pass through the park each day by way of Highway 27.

U.S. Highway 27 serves as a vital north-south link among the three States and its renewal is a top priority of the Georgia DOT. Highway 27 presently is undergoing construction from end to end to upgrade the highway for substantial commercial usage. At this point, the State of Georgia has allocated $71.7 million to the full length of the highway. In fiscal year 1993, Georgia DOT appropriated $12.4 million for the project, and for fiscal year 1994 through fiscal year 1999 it has authorized and will receive $353.4 million for completion of the project. When complete, Highway 27 will be a four-lane highway through rural areas of Georgia and will include five-lane bypass sections around urban areas with limited access.

The matching funds for this project are 75 percent Federal to 25 percent State. Total appropriated Federal funds for this project now stand at $23,456,000. Revised cost estimates by the Federal Highway Administration [FHWA], based on the Georgia Department of Transportation's actual average bid prices, increase the total cost of this project to $57.53 million. This increases the Federal share to $43.2 million. This amount exceeds the total funds authorized under Public Law 100–211 by $13.2 million. Therefore, this project needs to be reauthorized to reflect the appropriate dollar amounts.

Mr. Speaker, this is a worthwhile project for the State of Georgia. The people of the Ninth District of Georgia thank the House for its consideration of this bill.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DARDEN], the architect of this bill from the 100th Congress, as he continues his hard work in terms of support of this important project.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in very strong support of H.R. 3516. As the chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO], has explained, this bill would provide authorization necessary to complete the task of protecting the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Battlefield by constructing a highway bypass around the park.

I commend the chairman and also the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEAL] for their diligent efforts in bringing this important ongoing project in the State of Georgia before this body today.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot about unfunded mandates and situations in which the Federal Government imposes rules and regulations on States without picking up the cost of the mandates that they pass on to us. This situation is different, however, because when the Federal Government properly ruled, the National Park Service, the highway could not be widened within the park, this would have placed an undue amount of expense on the State and the counties to bring this parkway around this very historic national park.

Working with the Committee on the Interior staff several years ago and specifically the staff director, Dale Crane, we worked out a formula of 75 percent Federal and 25 percent State participation so we could assure that the extra cost brought about by the Federal Government's ruling would, in fact, be borne by the Federal Government, with the State participating up to 25 percent. This is a good compromise.

It is a good bill. It is necessary to raise the ceiling on the authorization, and I want to thank everyone involved for their strong support of this and ask that the House pass this legislation overwhelmingly.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3516. As Chairman VENTO has explained, this bill will provide the authorization necessary to complete the task of protecting the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Battlefield Park by constructing a highway bypass around the park. I commend the Chairman and Congressman DEAL for their diligent efforts in bringing this important, ongoing project in the State of Georgia before this body today.

Mr. Speaker, the need for the highway bypass around the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Battlefield Park in Walker and Catoosa County, GA, is clear. The Committee on Natural Resources' report on this project concludes that without relocation of a portion of U.S. Highway 27 from its current route through the park, important sections of the park will be damaged by the negative effects of heavy automobile traffic.

Mr. Speaker, the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, which was first established in 1890, is the oldest and largest national military park in the Nation. This area was the site of battles over the course of several months in the fall of 1863. These engagements involved the soldiers of many States, including Wisconsin, Indiana, Alabama, Massachusetts, Ohio, Illinois, and my home State of Georgia. This park is an historical site of significance that touches our entire nation.

Mr. Speaker, over the past several years the Congress has supported the effort to protect the Chickamauga and Chattanooga Military Park. I urge my colleagues to continue this support by approving H.R. 3516 which will allow this project to move forward to a successful completion.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Mr. Speaker, I commend both of the sponsors, the gentlemen from Georgia [Mr. DEAL] and [Mr. DARDEN], for this important bill and for their interest and dedication to this policy path.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3516, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4034, the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here today instead of the chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], who along with myself had advanced this idea and expanded the park and recreation opportunities in this bill for at-risk youth in high crime urban areas.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear to most of us that there are severe problems in terms of youth in our Nation today. Probably the statistic that is most appalling is that which indicates 1 in 5 children, nearly 1 in 5 children, or over 1 in 5 children, about 23 percent, in fact, live below the poverty level.

The bill, of course, attempts to try and provide some investment in these troubled communities in a small way. The bill recognizes the important role that urban recreation programs play in developing positive values for young people and keeping them away from crime. In fact, of course, it is this young population that is most likely to be the actors in terms of crime.

In fact, crime activities peak between the ages of 10 and 20, demographically, in our population.

The bill, and especially this legislation, tries to address that by providing some crime prevention dollars in terms of recreation facilities and programs. This program has long been in existence, since the late 1970's but has been woefully underfunded and has had little attention paid to it. In fact, while the authorization has existed, we are really expanding the authorization.

All one has to do, of course, is look at the relative costs in terms of the consequences of crime where we can document that an individual incarcerated, a juvenile incarcerated, we spend nearly $30,000 a year in terms of incarceration.

So a small investment in terms of trying to prevent that and providing some positive alternatives in our troubled communities, many times in urban communities, is, I think, a very sound investment.

Mr. Speaker, we held a lengthy hearing on this matter and had just a long list of public officials, of police, of park directors, and others that are working privately, the nonprofit sector, the boys' and girls' club, the midnight basketball leagues, many others that came from troubled communities to testify in favor of the desperate need for the types of funds that we are talking about in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I think it has become characteristic to look at an urban setting and the rusty basketball hoop made with metal as emblematic of what has happened in some of our troubled communities and urban areas.

The history of providing a built environment of recreation alternatives within our urban areas, within troubled communities and cities has long been a part of the planning that has gone into sound cityscapes. In fact, of course, in the 1850's, it is pointed out that New York and many other cities in the East began setting aside park areas, open-space areas such as Central Park and many others, but today those facilities are becoming and continue to be deteriorating.

Here we are only dealing with a small number of these areas, the areas that provide the recreation and organized opportunities to attract and respond to some of the very serious needs and the very serious needs for positive alternatives for young people in our society.

This is, I think, a very good measure in the sense that we can expand on an idea that is proven, there is an administration in place, there is a grant and application process in place, and all that is lacking is some flexibility in terms of how we can use these funds. And of course, the appropriations that go with it.

Whatever the outcome of the crime bill, I hope that is has a goodly amount of prevention, of alternative efforts to provide the opportunities for people to follow a different path in terms of their behavior.

These dollars for a particular program, we think, would be especially helpful in those instances, based on the hearing record that came forth; it provides flexibility, it requires eligible cities to submit plans, it uses administrative resources in place, it leverages additional resources by requiring a small match of 30 percent local match and also requires that they coordinate these activities with law enforcement personnel in the communities.

Very often, of course, the police and law enforcement officials themselves are the volunteers who do some of the coaching. It is interesting that they see the relationship between the positive activities like this and the reduction of what they face on the streets under more adverse conditions.

In fact, as an example, the midnight basketball type activity has this activity exactly at the time when incidents of violent crime are at the highest in our communities, urban communities. So, providing this activity provides them the opportunity, it takes people out of an orientation where they might be a perpetrator of an illegal action and puts them in a positive setting.

This is a commonsense notion, one I am sure that all Members of the House can endorse. Based upon our budget priorities, I hope this will gain a higher priority; based on the flexibility of this legislation, I hope it gains renewed interest and usefulness in the communities in which we are focusing.

I want to pay great credit to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER]. Chairman MILLER, as Members know, chaired the Youth and Families Select Committee prior to assuming the Natural Resources Committee. He has been a great friend of education, a great friend of recreation and other programs addressing the needs of youth across this Nation.

I think this is a great testament to his support, his forceful support for this measure. I hope it enlists the support of all the Members of this House and this will receive the renewed type of support it deserves.

Mr. Speaker, we intend to offer this as an amendment, if we have a broad crime bill presented to us in the near future; we hope to offer this measure as an amendment to it to make certain it becomes part of that package and does not get lost in the Senate.

But in terms of providing some recognition for this bill today and providing the policy changes so that Members can look at it more closely, I am pleased to present the bill and ask the Members for their support on the House floor.

H.R. 4034 is legislation introduced by Natural Resources Committee chairman GEORGE MILLER and myself to expand park and recreation opportunities for at-risk youth in high crime urban areas. The bill recognizes the important role that urban recreation programs play in developing positive values in our young people and in keeping them away from crime. The bill has 30 cosponsors and has been endorsed by the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the Boys and Girls Clubs of America, the National Association of Police Athletic Leagues, major league baseball, the National Recreation and Park Association, and 30 other organizations.

Crime, especially violent crime, is the No. 1 concern of the American people. Later this week, we will take up comprehensive crime control legislation on the House floor. We will debate how many billions should go into the building of prisons and bootcamps and the hiring of more police. The bill before us today recognizes that prevention is an essential tool in our struggle against violent crime in this country. H.R. 4034 expands the prevention side of the crime equation. In addition to our action here today, Chairman MILLER and I intend to offer this bill as an amendment to the crime bill.

Recently, the Natural Resources Committee held a lengthy hearing on crime and the role that recreation can play in crime prevention. We heard testimony from city park directors, policemen, boys and girls clubs, midnight basketball leagues, and others who are on the front lines of providing recreation services in crime-infested neighborhoods. We learned that recreation works as a crime prevention measure and that it is less expensive than spending the $29,000 a year it costs to incarcerate each juvenile offender. We learned that many young people in urban areas have little or no access to sports and recreation because of badly deteriorated facilities or because of program cutbacks. Unfortunately, we also learned that recreation has been grossly neglected as a national priority over the last decade.

The reason why urban park and recreation programs are so vital to anticrime efforts is because they target the age group most prone to crime—our youth. Fifty to sixty percent of all crime in the United States is committed by people 10 to 20 years of age. The incidence of crime peaks between the ages of 16 to 18 and quickly drops after age 21. If we can reach young people through sport and recreation programs before they turn to a life of crime, we will save dollars and lives.

Urban park and recreation programs have been around since the creation of New York's Central Park in the 1850's. Even then, it was recognized that young people need safe places to play and constructive activities to occupy their time so they don't turn to antisocial behaviors. The wisdom of this approach is more true now than ever. Urban dwellers, especially those in economically distressed communities, are the most dependent on having public parks and recreation programs. Low-income residents don't have the time or financial resources to travel to distant parks for recreation purposes.

In 1978 Congress enacted a program to help distressed urban areas develop recreation opportunities. The Urban Park and Recreation Recovery [UPARR] Program provides matching grants to economically distressed cities for repair of park and recreation facilities and for innovative recreation-based programs for youth. While the UPARR Program has proven to be effective, it has suffered from a lack of stable funding. UPARR received no funding from 1985 to 1990, and the past 2 years it has received only $5 million annually. The number of requests from cities which have matching funds ready to go is two to three times what the UPARR Program is able to fund.

H.R. 4034 would amend the UPARR Act to promote the expansion of recreation opportunities in urban areas with a high prevalence of crime. The bill authorizes a new category of UPARR grants called at-risk youth recreation grants. Grants would be for rehabilitation projects and programs in urban neighborhoods and communities with a high prevalence of crime. Funding would be authorized to increase the security of urban parks through capital improvements such as lighting and security phones.

The bill has been drafted to maximize cost efficiency and program effectiveness. First, it uses the administrative resources and procedures of the existing UPARR Program in order to minimize costs and bureaucracy. Second, it leverages additional resources by requiring a 30 percent local match. Third, it requires park and recreation officials to coordinate their efforts with law enforcement, social service agencies, and nonprofit community organizations involved in youth crime prevention. Fourth, it is flexible enough to allow nonprofit organizations such as boys and girls clubs, police athletic leagues, and midnight basketball programs to receive funding assistance. Fifth, it requires eligible cities to submit a plan which states how they intend to improve recreation opportunities in crime ridden neighborhoods over the long term. Finally, it requires facilities which have been improved as a result of this grant program to remain open for public recreation uses in perpetuity.

Congress has previously recognized the importance of recreation in preventing crime and delinquency. Amendments to the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act in 1992 and the National Affordable Housing Act have specifically included authorization for recreation programs. The crime bills making their way through the House and Senate also mention recreation, although some of the provisions are duplicative of existing programs or create new bureaucracies. H.R. 4034 is a cost-effective approach because it builds on a successful existing program. We don't need to create new programs and bureaucracies to stimulate recreation programs when we already have an effective one on the books which has been underfunded.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to vote in favor of this important measure to help deter crime and promote the positive development of our Nation's youth.

NATIONAL RECREATION AND PARK ASSOCIATION,
Arlington, VA, March 21, 1994.

Hon. GEORGE MILLER,
Chairman, Committee on Natural Resources,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We write to commend your committee for its recent hearing on recreation and crime prevention and the timely consideration of legislation to amend the urban park and recreation recovery program, first authorized in 1978. The result of that event was the induction of H.R. 4034 whose passage we strongly support, with the further recommendation that it also be incorporated as an element of anti-crime legislation expected to be considered later this week.

The March 10 hearing was, to the best of our knowledge, the first and certainly the most comprehensive to explore the relationship between quality recreation opportunities for children, youth and families and prevention of delinquency and crime. The hearing was critical, too, in exposing the relationship between recreation as a social phenomenon and the imperative for access to a wide range of well maintained public facilities and lands. Public park and recreation systems encompass over 5,000 municipal and county entities which manage over 85,000 park and recreation sites. Another 20,000 sites are managed by state and interstate units of government. The proven importance of these systems—public services and resources—have thus far been substantially understated in the Congress's debate on crime control and prevention.

H.R. 4034 would focus resources on those places in most critical need of help. It would invest public funds in public places and services, while continuing present authority to collaborate with private entities where the public interest is best served by that approach. H.R. 4034 recognizes the record and potential of public park and recreation systems nationwide. It would allow, if funded, the initiation or expansion of scores of other programs. Consider for example, the impact of the following examples which could be replicated:

Dallas, Texas Parks and Recreation Department coordinates a city-wide gang intervention program in conjunction with public and private groups, including the police department, social services and juvenile justice system.

The Texas Park and Wildlife Department's "Buffalo Soldiers" volunteer program interprets the legacy of African-Americans in the West. In two years 30,000 youth have benefited from this public-private outreach program.

Phoenix, Arizona's Parks, Recreation and Library Department impacts 1.7 million youth. Enhanced recreation programs have reduced calls for police assistance up to 55 percent in some areas.

Mesa, Arizona's coalition of community leadership, public agency and private organization gang prevention steering committee collaborates on strategies to prevent and suppress gang activity, placing high priority on recreation opportunities for your and families.

Rialto, California's Recreation Department and a Task Force on Youth have expanded after-school youth services in high-risk neighborhoods to combat drugs and gangs; 70–80 people participate daily.

Richmond, Virginia Department of Recreation and Parks coordinates a R.E.A.D.Y. (Recreation and Education Activities Designed for Youth) collaborative program reaching over 7,000 youth.

Mobile facilities and "late night" programs in hundreds of jurisdictions bring services and qualified staff to underserved communities and populations.

We commend the committee for its initiative and urge the strong support of the House.

Thank you for your continuing leadership.

Sincerely,

R. DEAN TICE,
Executive Director.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the issue of crime, and especially juvenile crime, has understandably angered and outraged our Nation. Today, perhaps 60 percent of violent crimes are committed by young people between the ages of 10 and 20 years old.

For millions of these young people, the only social network and family structure they know are the urban gangs that deal drugs, foster crime, and slaughter each other in our Nation's streets.

Today, we are considering H.R. 4034, the Urban Recreation and At Risk Youth Act, which was introduced as a means of providing young people with constructive, supportive alternatives to street life and gangs.

We seek to build on an existing, effective, but undersupported program, not to create new mandates, new policies, or new administrative costs.

The Urban Park and Recreation Recovery Program offers matching grants to cities to rehabilitate and repair parks, recreation centers, playing fields, and other facilities. Matching grants also are available for programs that use recreation as a tool to teach young people the kind of skills they need to build constructive, positive lives.

When UPARR has been funded it has been enormously successful—hundreds of parks, rec centers, pools, and other facilities that otherwise would have been unable to meet the needs of their neighborhoods or simply closed their doors have been at work in their communities.

These programs, run by cities, police departments, schools or nonprofit entities like the boys and girls clubs bring at-risk youth in contact with caring adult mentors who teach them the kind of personal skills and job skills they need to stay out of the gangs and in school.

In its 15 years, more than 500 cities across America have benefited from UPARR. Neighborhoods in big cities like New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles, but also small- and medium-sized cities like Huntsville, AL, and Oxnard, CA, and Shreveport, LA, New Britain, CT, and Pontiac, MI, have been grant recipients.

Yet, since 1979, only $192 million of the $750 million authorized for UPARR has been spent. Despite a record of success and a huge backlog of applications that typically ran many times the number of grants approved, nothing at all was spent on UPARR from 1985 to 1990 as urban poverty and crime, and especially youth poverty and youth crime, skyrocketed.

And we have not been doing much better since then, with only $5 million appropriated in 1991 and 1992. These meager amounts mean that program grants must remain small and on a one-time only basis, vastly limiting the effectiveness of the program. Many worthy applications are turned down for lack of funding; others are not even submitted for consideration.

H.R. 4034 builds on the proven record of success of the Urban Parks and Recreation Recovery Act.

The bill incorporates new findings that make clear the relationship between urban parks and recreation and programs to help youth avoid a life of crime. It makes clear that urban neighborhoods with a high crime rate are to receive priority consideration in grant decisions, as well as programs that target at-risk youth, collaborate with nonprofit and police groups and leverage non-Federal resources.

For the first time, it allows the Secretary to make multiyear program grants, instead of one-time-only start up grants. And finally, it requires cities to update their recreation recovery plans to reflect the need to target at-risk youth.

These changes are modest because UPARR already has demonstrated its ability to quickly and effectively provide the places cities need to provide recreation for its residents and give teachers of all kinds a place to teach children. But these changes also are needed to help UPARR better respond to those needs and meet new priorities.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that when the House considers the omnibus crime bill it will have an opportunity to incorporate H.R. 4034. Many of us in the House recognize that a bill that deals only with the aftermath of crime by building more jails and imposing longer sentences is doomed if we do not do something to get young people off the track that puts them on a collision course with police, courts, and prisons in the first place.

Some provisions in the Senate and House Judiciary Committee bills recognize this vital fact. Programs like ounce of prevention, midnight basketball, and community schools are important, necessary steps in the right direction.

I strongly believe that the updated urban park program we are discussing today is highly compatible with and even necessary to these other laudable efforts. The UPARR Program provides places where these vital programs can be located. In fact, recreation centers, whether they are in buildings owned by schools, municipalities or nonprofits, are magnets to young people like no other kind of place.

Moreover, UPARR already has the structure, the network and the working relationships to get millions of much-needed new money literally on the streets and serving our young people in no more than 4 months. This is crucial.

Mr. Speaker, the extraordinary outpouring of support in just a few days is impressive testimony to the simple common sense of this approach. The U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National Association for Sport and Physical Education, the National Police Athletic League, the Boys and Girls Clubs of America, Major League Baseball and the National Hockey League endorse this legislation. So do Nike, Reebok, Wilson, Spalding, Avia, Coleman, the Sporting Goods Manufacturing Association, the 20,000-member National Sporting Goods Association, and major regional retailers as well as parks and environmental organizations.

Mr. Speaker, this is the right thing to do. The mayors know it, the police know it, the kids know it.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as with all Members of this House, I am very concerned about the growing violent crime in this country. For that reason, I support strong anticrime measures similar to the one that was passed by the other body last year on a bipartisan basis. I hope that the leadership of this House will permit a strong measure to come before the House.

H.R. 4034, as described by Chairman Vento, authorizes the expenditure of Federal funds for recreation programs targeted at at-risk youth in urban areas through the Urban Park and Recreation Renewal Program.

While there is evidence that some youth recreation programs can be effective, an effective alternative to violence, there is some question as to whether or not this should be the highest priority for the use of limited Federal funds available for fighting violence on the streets in this country.

Further, it does not appear that this measure authorizes any new programs that do not already appear in the 1978 law. The appropriations for this program have gone down from substantial appropriations early to very little activity of late.

I note that recent administrations of both parties have only funded this program at a minimal level. Frankly, I expect that that would remain unchanged unless, of course, you are successful in getting it into the crime bill, which would force, I suppose, some appropriation. And that is what this exercise is about, I imagine.

At any rate, this bill does not lead to the establishment of any new Federal programs nor any additional expenditures of Federal dollars, and I do not intend to oppose it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. Martinez], a subcommittee chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor and a supporter of the bill.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4034 and I would like to offer my thanks to Chairman Miller and Chairman Vento for bringing this measure to the floor.

As noted, this bill amends current authorizing legislation to provide a new category of competitive grants under the urban park and recreation recovery program.

In my congressional district, I have found that current law is insufficient to ensure that local efforts are able to achieve success, even where local activities have garnered wide support, both in terms of volunteers and funding to undertake projects to reclaim recreational sites to be used to provide sites for activities designed to lessen incidences of gang and other criminal activities by at-risk youth.

The city of El Monte, in my district, raised over $130,000 in matching funds for projects under UPARR, and filed a request for Federal funding under the act.

Even though their application was a model under the program, they were denied funding because of a lack of available Federal funding.

I believe that, as we begin to consider prevention of crime in our cities this week, it is unconscionable that we cannot fund these critical programs.

I support H.R. 4034, and trust that my colleagues will vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I do so in order to point out that I have received a list of some 36 organizations supporting the Urban Recreation and At-Risk Youth Act of 1994. It does substantively change the basic law that we wrote, written actually by a mentor of the gentleman from California [Mr. Miller] and myself, the former chairman of the subcommittee at that time, the gentleman from California, Mr. Phil Burton.

I think that Congressman Thomas—and I appreciate his support for this—he points out rightly that if we do not get appropriations, good laws, good policies do not serve their desired ends. But at least I think with the type of reawakening that is occurring in terms of the recognition of youth and their relationship to violent crime, which has come to grip our society, that we have an opportunity to do some investments, some seed money with programs like this which will have a great return in terms of saving money at the other end of the spectrum when in fact we are dealing with people on the streets and dealing with the violence.

So I think trying to keep this going, it sounds like such a commonsense notion, one that has simply eluded many of our urban areas. Our urban areas are having difficulty meeting their budgets because of the lack of income, the lack of manufacturing jobs and employment which has occurred, and the property and tax base erosion which they are experiencing.

But these 36 organizations, including at the top of the list the U.S. Conference of Mayors, a group which is obviously concerned with the urban America and towns and cities they represent, and the Boys' and Girls' Clubs of America. I mention them because, again, they are active in these communities, providing the type of counseling necessary. It goes on with 36 other groups, some companies, some of which actually sell sporting goods and have an interest here, but more often the public-interest and others, all interested in the prevention of crime, this law can work, and should be given new emphasis in the 1995 crime legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that our colleagues, we will all join together and try to put a priority in terms of funding a program of this nature, which has, I think, tremendous potential with the new flexibility, and then, too, I think there is a concern that we somehow commit funds, a trust fund as it were, for the crime bill that is being considered. I do not know if that is going to come to pass. I think that is a different debate. But if it does, I would hope that some of these dollars, some substantial amounts of them, would be put into this crime-prevention type of initiative that we have before us on the floor today.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will put this in the Record and ask my colleagues to strongly support this, and again I commend the gentleman from California [Mr. Miller], chairman of the Committee on Natural Resources, for the outstanding work that he has done on urban youth and recreation programs and throughout his service in Congress, especially now chairing the Committee on Natural Resources, and I would ask that his statement be made part of the Record.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, interested, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] is, in urban areas and the crime there. I just guess I would like to make the point that we do not all come from urban areas, and, when we talk about Federal programs, Mr. Speaker, we see, it seems to me, more and more of a tilt constantly, whether it is education, crime, whatever, toward urban areas. I think there has to be some fairness and equity.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, the language of this bill refers to urban areas, but I have come to recognize, working on serious social problems, that they know no bounds, and so I have come, when I have worked on homlessness, come to use the term "troubled communities" as an alternative because they, too, have the same problems that some urban areas or some troubled urban areas have, so the use of the words "troubled communities" seems to fit. But it is a case in terms of problems with cities, even though one may live in a suburb or they may live someplace else, but it is the trouble at the core that emanates out, and I understand the gentleman, coming from the ranching and rural communities, and that we so often are discussing issues that affect them in a different vein. But certainly I think we have to find ways to deal with the pockets of problems that exist in these areas. We have done that successfully, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows.

During my service on the Committee on Natural Resources, and I also serve on the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, but very often the programs that we have written have been responsive, and I would hope that this also could meet the very special needs that exist in the ranches and rural areas, the pockets of problems, the pockets of poverty, the pockets of troubled communities in those areas. Wyoming is a great State, but I am certain some of these issues do manifest themselves.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO]. I just wanted to make certain.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, sadly, the problem is familiar: children are being seduced by drugs, crime, and guns because they have little hope of escaping the poverty, despair, and violence of their daily lives.

Faced with this destructive trend, southwest Florida communities are fighting back—and winning. The success through academic and recreational support program [STARS] is an innovative approach to providing at-risk children between the ages of 8 and 14 with alternatives to juvenile crime, drugs, and violence.

STARS gives kids a place to go after schools where learning, friendly athletic competition, and positive role models replace street corners, drug trading, and gangs. This program is the product of an unprecedented alliance between the city of Fort Myers, an independent county school board, the school district of Lee County, the State of Florida, the Federal Government, private nonprofit organizations, and the private-corporate sector of the local community. STARS, an urban recreational and academic program like those envisioned by H.R. 4034, has been so successful that it is justly credited with the steady decline of juvenile crime in the city of Fort Myers. The positive achievements of the STARS Program can be directly credited to the hard work, dedication, and cooperation of Florida's leaders, including Fort Myers Mayor Wilbur Smith, Fort Myers Police Chief Donna Hansen, and U.S. Senator CONNIE MACK. I am proud to identify STARS as a role model for other urban cities in search of effective programs to combat teen crime, drugs, illiteracy, and poverty.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a landscape that is littered with failure, failed programs that did not work, and so I am offering this little bit of a success story, and I am very apt to report that the original seed tax money, those tax dollars in this case, were well invested and well spent, and I think that is a test that every program should be submitted to, and, if they come up as well as this one, we will be doing our job very well.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS] for having yielded this time to me.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, the youth of our Nation are crying out for help. Threats of gang warfare are escalating and becoming more violent in our inner cities. Violence in parks, vandalism of school buildings and torment of many of our citizens mark the daily choices of activity a large proportion of youth pick to occupy their free time. We must help our younger generations to find healthy, productive ways to spend their free hours.

The Urban Park and At Risk Youth Act is a good bill which will do just that. Improved recreational facilities will give youth the pride of being able to step onto sparkling courts to shoot some hoops or onto clean and trimmed fields to score a few home runs. Let's improve our rundown parks and allow our youngsters to play with new equipment.

This cooperative effort will bring together law enforcement and social service agencies and park and recreation officials to positively combat juvenile crime.

Non-profits which care for at risk youth such as the Boys and Girls Clubs of America will be able to apply for funding through this bill. In the State of Hawaii, very successful late night basketball leagues will also be able to receive funds to ensure the continuation of these programs. The Honolulu Police Department noted a reduction in the rates of juvenile crime during league activities.

It's sad to see our children sitting around after school with nothing to do. Let's give them all a chance at friendly competition in sports activities. Every child should have an opportunity to say they're No. 1.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of this thoughtful and urgently-needed legislation. I extend my thanks to the crafters of this bill, particularly full committee Chairman GEORGE MILLER and subcommittee Chairman BRUCE VENTO, who, like many of us in this body, recognize that one of the many challenges we face as a nation working within the constraints of an ever-tightening budget is providing recreational resources and alternatives for the young people who can least afford them and who are at greatest risk if they don't get them.

The Urban Recreation At-Risk Youth Act would add a new category of competitive grants under the Urban Park and Recreation Recovery Program, established in 1978. The new category of "At-Risk Youth Grants" seeks to address the realities of our times—that crime has a chokehold on most of the Nation's urban areas and that the criminals are getting younger and younger. The matching grant funds that would be authorized under this bill would go to the Nation's urban crime hotspots for rehabilitating deteriorating urban recreational facilities and developing recreational programs run by State and local governments as well as non-profit organizations.

The bill's focus on urban areas with high crime rates is especially critical since many of our cities are producing a new generation of criminals—younger, tougher, and remorseless. The more assistance we give to our cities in reaching out to youth, even if only with matching grants, the more we do to aid cities in combatting our Nation's rising juvenile crime rate.

The District of Columbia provides a prime example of what happens when money for recreational facilities and programs evaporates. In our city, many of the neighborhoods with the highest crime rates are those where the facilities are rusted, broken, or non-existent. A dozen years of neglect are yielding a decade of soaring crime rates and overcrowded prisons. Thus, it is too late for many. Trying juvenile offenders as adults at younger and younger ages has not worked, and neither has imprisoning them for longer periods of time. Isn't it time we supported the alternatives to crime that kids have shown they embrace?

The older folk used to say, "An idle mind is the devil's workshop." In modern times we witness the truth of this axiom every day, particularly in cities full of children and adolescents who have no constructive, safe and fun outlets once the school day ends. Extracurricular recreation programs, be they in our Nation's parks, schools, community centers, provide an ideal outlet for properly directing youthful energy so that it will not become destructive. We certainly owe our young people opportunities and resources to enjoy this time in their lives and to prepare for a productive adult life. H.R. 4034 won't do all we need to do, certainly not nearly as much what our youth deserve. But it is a thoughtful and well-crafted effort in these budget-conscious times. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this bill and I urge its passage.

Miss COLLINS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Interior Committee for bringing to us today the Urban Recreation and At-Risk Youth Act. I will cast an enthusiastic "aye" vote.

This bill would create a new grant program for projects to improve recreational facilities and expand recreational services in urban communities that have a high crime rate. Grantees could, for example, rehabilitate existing facilities or install lights and security telephones. Importantly, grants could be awarded for programs to prevent young people from entering the criminal justice system and priority must be given to youth at greatest risk.

As one who represents an urban district, a district in which unemployment among minority adults is almost 20 percent and among some African-American males is 40 percent, I welcome this new initiative. Adolescents, we all know, are very vulnerable. What parent has not worried about what his or her child is doing after school. Most children in America today are raised in homes with two working parents or by a single working parent. One study found that 27 percent of eighth graders spend two or more hours at home alone every day.

With 60 percent of their time devoted to essential activities, young people have a large chunk of discretionary time. Yet most communities are hard strapped to provide quality after-school programs. Faced with boredom and neglect, some of our young people stray into unproductive activities and delinquency. One authority has said that 25 percent of youngsters aged 10 to 17 are at serious risk of not achieving productive adulthood.

It is long past time for us to recognize that we must give our young people alternatives to the street. By doing so, we are less likely to pay the societal bills for crime, delinquency, substance abuse, teen pregnancies, welfare and health care. And our young people deserve this kind of support and opportunity.

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I, too, yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Montgomery). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Vento] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4034, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1284, DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES ASSISTANCE AND BILL OF RIGHTS ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1994

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 1284) to amend the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act to expand or modify certain provisions relating to programs for individuals with developmental disabilities, Federal assistance for priority area activities for individuals with developmental disabilities, protection and advocacy of individual rights, university affiliated programs, and projects of national significance, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

(For conference report and statement, see prior proceedings of the House of today.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. Moorhead] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 1284.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the principal purpose of S. 1284 is to revise and extend the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act. The act authorizes four programs designed to assist individuals with developmental disabilities to live more productive lives in communities and institutions: the State developmental disability councils; the protection and advocacy programs; the university affiliated programs; and projects of national significance. These four programs are authorized for a total of $117 million in fiscal year 1994, which is also the current appropriations level, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1995 and 1996.

The compromise legislation worked out with the Senate includes resolution of the issues brought to our attention on the needs of individuals living in the community and in institutions.

The legislation enjoys broad support on both sides of the aisle. I would especially like to thank my colleagues, Mr. Dingell, Mr. Bliley, Mr. Greenwood, and Mr. Brown for their hard work in bringing us to consensus on this legislation. I would also like to thank my colleagues on the Education and Labor Committee for their interest and valuable input into this process.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on S. 1284.

Mr. Speaker, developmental disabilities are severe, chronic disabilities, either physical, mental, or a combination, which manifest themselves before a person reaches age 22. These disabilities result in substantial limitations in three or more major life areas, such as learning, mobility, and capacity for independent living. There are currently about 3 million individuals with developmental disabilities in the United States.

The developmental disabilities assistance and bill of rights act authorizes four programs: The State grant program; protection and advocacy systems; university affiliated programs; and projects of national significance. These programs work to support the development of a comprehensive system of services and support for people with developmental disabilities.

I am very pleased that language addressing the concerns of the voice of the retarded were incorporated in the conference report. I understand that the original House report language caused concern among several groups in the field. I am pleased that in clarifying this language we retained the language which states: "The goals expressed in this act to promote the greatest possible integration and independence for individuals with developmental disabilities may not be read as a Federal policy supporting the closure of residential institutions."

I am also pleased that all the funding levels in the bill are those that were in the House bill and that several of the concerns of some Governors were addressed.

I support the conference report and urge my colleagues to join me.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the Senate bill, S. 1284.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 12, rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2:30 p.m.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 42 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until 2:30 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. COLEMAN] at 2 o'clock and 31 minutes p.m.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1804, GOALS 2000: EDUCATE AMERICA ACT

TITLE IX—EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH AND IMPROVEMENT

SEC. 901. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Educational Research, Development, Dissemination, and Improvement Act of 1994".

SEC. 902. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds as follows with respect to improving education in the United States:

(1) A majority of public schools in the United States are failing to prepare students to achieve the National Education Goals. The Federal Government should support an extensive program of educational research, development, dissemination, replication and assistance to identify and support the best responses for the challenges ahead. A significant investment in attaining a deeper understanding of the processes of learning and schooling and developing new ideas holds the best hope of making a substantial difference to the lives of every student in the United States. The Office of Educational Research and Improvement within the Department of Education should be at the center of this campaign in order to coordinate such efforts.

(2) The Federal role in educational research has been closely identified with youths who are socioeconomically disadvantaged, are minorities, belong to a language minority, or have a disability. The Federal commitment to education was sufficient to serve not more than—

(A) in 1993, 1 out of every 6 low-income children in need of preschool education;

(B) in 1990, 3 out of every 5 children in need of remediation;

(C) in 1991, 1 out of every 5 children in need of bilingual education; and

(D) in 1992, 1 out of every 20 youths eligible for assistance under the Job Training Partnership Act.

(3) The failure of the Federal Government to adequately invest in educational research and development has denied the United States a sound foundation of knowledge on which to design school improvements. The educational achievement of minority children is of particular concern because at least half of the public school students in 25 of the largest cities of the United States are minority children, and demographers project that, by the year 2005, almost all urban public school students will be minority children or other children in poverty.

(4) The investment goal of the Federal research, development, and dissemination function should be at least 1 percent of the total amount of funds spent on educationally.

(5) Nationwide model programs and reliable interventions should be demonstrated and replicated, and for such purposes, programs should be established to conduct research and evaluations, and to disseminate information.

(6) The Office should develop a national dissemination policy that will advance the goal of placing a national treasure chest of research results, models, and materials at the disposal of the education decisionmakers of the United States.

(7) A National Educational Research Policy and Priorities Board should be established to work collaboratively with the Assistant Secretary to forge a national consensus with respect to a long-term agenda for educational research, development, dissemination, and the activities of the Office.

(8) Existing research and development entities should adopt expanded, proactive roles and new institutions should be created to promote knowledge development necessary to accelerate the application of research findings to high priority areas.

(9) Greater use should be made of existing technologies in efforts to improve the educational system of the United States, including efforts to disseminate research findings.

(10) Minority educational researchers are inadequately represented throughout the Department of Education, but particularly in the Office. The Office therefore should assume a leadership position in the recruitment, retention, and promotion of qualified minority educational researchers.

(11) The coordination of the mission of the Office with that of other components of the Department of Education is critical. The Office should improve the coordination of the educational research, development, and dissemination function with those of other Federal agencies.

(C) may accept voluntary and uncompensated services.

(d) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON STUDENT ACHIEVEMENT, CURRICULUM, AND ASSESSMENT.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(A) The current achievement levels of students in the United States are far below those that might indicate competency in challenging subject matter in core content areas.

(B) During the last 20 years, relatively little changed in how students were taught. Despite much research suggesting better alternatives, classrooms continue to be dominated by textbooks, teacher lectures, short-answer activity sheets, and unequal patterns of student attention.

(C) Despite progress in narrowing the gaps, the differences in performance between Caucasian students and their minority counterparts remain unacceptably large. While progress has been made in reducing the gender gap in mathematics, such gap still remains at higher levels of problem solving. Too little progress has been made in reducing gender performance gaps favoring males in science and females in writing.

(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the National Institute on Student Achievement, Curriculum, and Assessment is to carry out a coordinated and comprehensive program of research and development to provide research-based leadership to the United States as it seeks to improve student achievement in core content areas and the integration of such areas. Such program shall—

(A) identify, develop, and evaluate innovative and exemplary methods to improve student knowledge at all levels in the core content areas, such as—

(i) student learning and assessment in various subject matters;

(ii) the effects of organizational patterns on the delivery of instruction, including issues of grouping and tracking, ungraded classrooms, and on the effects of various pedagogies, including the issues of technology in education;

(v) enabling students to develop higher order thinking skills;

(vi) methods to teach effectively all students in mixed-ability classrooms;

(vii) curriculum, instruction, and assessment, in vocational education and school-to-work transition;

(C) identify, develop, and evaluate programs designed to enhance academic achievement and narrow racial and gender performance gaps in a variety of subject areas, including research and development on methods of involving parents in their children's education and ways to involve business, industry and other community partners in promoting excellence in schools; and

(D) include a comprehensive, coordinated program of research and development in the area of assessment which—

(i) addresses issues such as—

(I) the validity, reliability, generalizability, costs, relative merits, and most appropriate uses of various approaches and methods of assessing student learning and achievement;

(II) methods and approaches to assessing student opportunities to learn (including the quality of instruction and the availability of resources necessary to support learning) and evaluating the quality of school environment;

(III) the impact of high-stakes uses of assessment on student performance and motivation, narrowing of curriculum, teaching practices, and test integrity;

(IV) the impact of various methods of assessment on children of different races, ethnicities, gender, socioeconomic status, and English language proficiencies, and children with other special needs;

(V) standards of performance, quality, and validity for various methods of assessment and the means by which such standards should be developed;

(VI) current and emerging testing practices of State and local education agencies within the United States, as well as other nations;

(VII) the diverse effects, both intended and unintended, of assessments as actually used in the schools, including effects on curriculum and instruction, effects on equity in the allocation of resources and opportunities, effects on equity of outcomes, effects on other procedures and standards for judging students and practitioners and possible inflation of test scores;

(VIII) identifying and evaluating how students with limited-English proficiency and students with disabilities are included and accommodated in the various assessment programs of State and local education agencies;

(IX) the feasibility and validity of comparing or equating the results of different assessments;

(XI) relevant teacher training and instruction in giving a test, scoring a test, and in the use of test results to improve student achievement;

(XII) developing, identifying, or evaluating new educational assessments, including performance-based and portfolio assessments which demonstrate skill and a command of knowledge; and

(XIII) other topics relevant to the purposes of the Institute; and

(ii) may reflect recommendations made by the National Education Goals Panel.

(e) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON THE EDUCATION OF AT-RISK STUDENTS.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(A) The rate of decline in our urban schools is escalating at a rapid pace. Student performance in most inner city schools grows worse each year. At least half of all students entering ninth grade fail to graduate 4 years later and many more students from high-poverty backgrounds leave school with skills that are inadequate for today's workplace. Student performance in many inner city neighborhoods grows worse each year. At least half of all students entering ninth grade fail to graduate in 4 years. In 1992, the average National Assessment of Educational Progress reading score of Caucasian 17 year-olds was approximately 25 points higher than that of African American 17 year-olds and 20 points higher than that of Hispanic 17 year-olds.

(B) Rural schools enroll a disproportionately large share of the poor and at-risk students of the United States and yet often lack the means to address effectively the needs of these children. Intensive efforts should be made to overcome the problems of geographic isolation, declining population, inadequate financial resources and other impediments to the educational success of children residing in rural areas.

(C) By the year 2000, an estimated 3,400,000 school age children with limited-English proficiency will be entering the school system. The Federal Government should develop effective policies and programs to address the educational needs of this growing population of children who are at increased risk of educational failure.

(D) An educational emergency exists in those urban and rural areas where there are large concentrations of children who live in poverty. The numbers of disadvantaged children will substantially increase by the year 2020, when the number of impoverished children alone will be 16,500,000, a 33 percent increase over the 12,400,000 children in poverty in 1987.

(E) American Indian and Alaska Native students have high dropout, illiteracy and poverty rates, and experience cultural, linguistic, social and geographic isolation. The estimated 400,000 Indian and Alaska Native student population from over 500 Indian and Alaska Native tribes, is small and scattered throughout remote reservations and villages in 32 States, and in off-reservation rural and urban communities where Indians constitute but a small percentage of public school student bodies. To meaningfully address the special educational needs of this historically under-served population, the existing research and development system should be opened to Indian and Alaska Native people to identify needs and design ways to address such needs.

(F) Minority scholars as well as institutions and groups that have been historically committed to the improvement of the education of at-risk students need to be more fully mobilized in the effort to develop a new generation of programs, models, practices, and schools capable of responding to the urgent needs of students who are educationally at-risk.

(2) PURPOSE.—It shall be the purpose of the Institute on the Education of At-Risk Students to carry out a coordinated and comprehensive program of research and development to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the United States as it seeks to improve educational opportunities for at-risk students. Such program shall—

(A) undertake research necessary to provide a sound basis from which to identify, develop, evaluate, and assist others to replicate and adapt interventions, programs, and models which promote greater achievement and educational success by at-risk students, such as—

(i) methods of instruction and educational practices (including community services) which improve the achievement and retention of at-risk students;

(ii) the quality of educational opportunities afforded at-risk students, particularly the quality of educational opportunities afforded such students in highly concentrated urban areas and sparsely populated rural areas;

(iii) methods for overcoming the barriers to learning that may impede student achievement;

(iv) innovative teacher training and professional development methods to help at-risk students meet challenging standards;

(v) methods to improve the quality of the education of American Indian and Alaska Native students not only in schools funded by the Bureau, but also in public elementary and secondary schools located on or near Indian reservations, including—

(I) research on mechanisms to facilitate the establishment of tribal departments of education that assume responsibility for all education programs of State educational agencies operating on an Indian reservation and all education programs funded by the Bureau on an Indian reservation;

(II) research on the development of culturally appropriate curriculum for American Indian and Alaska Native students, including American Indian and Alaska Native culture, language, geography, history and social studies, and graduation requirements related to such curriculum;

(III) research on methods for recruiting, training and retraining qualified teachers from American Indian and Alaska Native communities, including research to promote flexibility in the criteria for certification of such teachers;

(IV) research on techniques for improving the educational achievement of American Indian and Alaska Native students, including methodologies to reduce dropout rates and increase graduation by such students; and

(V) research concerning the performance by American Indian and Alaska Native students of limited-English proficiency on standardized achievement tests, and related factors;

(vi) means by which parents and community resources and institutions (including cultural institutions) can be utilized to support and improve the achievement of at-risk students;

(vii) the training of teachers and other educational professionals and paraprofessionals to work more effectively with at-risk students;

(viii) the most effective uses of technology in the education of at-risk students;

(ix) programs designed to promote gender equity in schools that serve at-risk students;

(x) improving the ability of classroom teachers and schools to assist new and diverse populations of students in successfully assimilating into the classroom environment;

(f) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT AND EDUCATION.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(A) Despite efforts to expand and improve preschool programs, many children still reach school age unprepared to benefit from formal education programs.

(B) Early intervention for disadvantaged children from birth to age five has been shown to be a highly cost-effective strategy for reducing later expenditures on a wide variety of health, developmental, and educational problems that often interfere with learning. Long-term studies of the benefits of preschool education have a demonstrated return on investment ranging from three to six dollars for every one dollar spent.

(C) The Federal government should play a central role in providing research-based information on early childhood education models which enhance children's development and ultimately their success in school.

(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the National Institute on Early Childhood Development and

Education is to carry out a comprehensive program of research and development to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the United States as it seeks to improve early childhood development and education. Such program shall undertake research necessary to provide a sound basis from which to identify, develop, evaluate, and assist others to replicate methods and approaches that promise to improve early childhood development and education, such as—

(A) social and educational development of infants, toddlers, and preschool children;

(B) the role of parents and the community in promoting the successful social and educational development of children from birth to age five;

(g) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON EDUCATIONAL GOVERNANCE, FINANCE, POLICY-MAKING, AND MANAGEMENT.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(A) Many elementary and secondary schools in the United States—

(i) are structured according to models that are ineffective and rely on notions of management and governance that may be outdated or insufficient for the challenges of the next century; and

(ii) are unsuccessful in equipping all students with the knowledge and skills needed to succeed as citizens and in the working world.

(B) New approaches are needed in the governance and management of elementary and secondary education within the United States at the State, local, school building and classroom level.

(C) Not enough is known about the effects of various systems of school governance and management on student achievement to provide sound guidance to policymakers as such policymakers pursue school restructuring and reform.

(D) A concentrated Federal effort is needed to support research, development, demonstration, and evaluation of approaches to school governance, finance and management which promise to improve education equity and excellence throughout the United States.

(2) PURPOSE.—It shall be the purpose of the National Institute on Educational Governance, Finance, Policy-Making, and Management to carry out a coordinated and comprehensive program of research and development to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the United States as it seeks to improve student achievement through school restructuring and reform. Such program shall undertake research necessary to provide a sound basis from which to identify, develop and evaluate approaches in elementary and secondary school governance, finance, policy-making, and management at the State, local, tribal, school building and classroom level which promise to improve educational equity and excellence, such as—

(A) open enrollment programs, public school choice, magnet schools and other systems through which parents may select the public schools and educational programs in which their children are enrolled;

(B) innovative school design, including lengthening the school day and the school year, reducing class size and building professional development into the weekly school schedule and, as appropriate, conducting such further research as may be recommended or suggested by the report issued by the National Education Commission on Time and Learning pursuant to section 102 of the Education Council Act of 1991 (20 U.S.C. 1221-1 note);

(C) effective approaches to organizing learning;

(D) effective ways of grouping students for learning so that a student is not labeled or stigmatized in ways that may impede such student's achievement;

(E) effective approaches to organizing, structuring, and financing vocational education;

(F) the provision of financial and other rewards and incentives to schools and educators based on performance to improve student achievement;

(G) the use of regulatory flexibility on the State or school district level to promote innovation and school restructuring;

(M) the involvement of parents and families in the management and governance of schools and the education of their children; and

(N) effective approaches to increasing the representation of women and minorities among leadership and management positions in education;

(O) approaches to systemic reforms involving the coordination of multiple policies of each level of government to promote higher levels of student achievement;

(P) approaches to coordinated services for children;

(Q) teacher certification at the State and tribal levels; and

(R) school-based management, shared decisionmaking and other innovative school structures, and State and local reforms and educational policies, which show promise for improving student achievement;

(S) policies related to school-to-work transitions and preparing non-college-bound students; and

(T) other topics relevant to the mission of the Institute.

(h) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION, LIBRARIES, AND LIFELONG LEARNING.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(A) The American system of postsecondary education is foremost in the world in such system's achievement of both academic excellence and equity in access, but maintaining that preeminence requires renewed efforts to strengthen the quality of postsecondary education. Disappointing student performance on achievement tests and licensure examinations, declining rates of postsecondary education persistence and completion among minorities, and other troubling trends in the quality of postsecondary education should be addressed by the United States as part of its overall drive to improve American education.

(B) The need to improve our economic productivity of the United States to meet the competitive challenges of a new, international economy, coupled with high levels of mobility in the United States labor market and demographic changes in the workforce, now demands more and higher quality programs of learning and training in the American workplace.

(C) The more than 1,000,000 men and women incarcerated in the prisons and jails in the United States are among the most severely educationally disadvantaged in the United States, with high rates of functional illiteracy and extremely low levels of educational attainment. Since an estimated 90 percent of these individuals are expected to be released by the end of the decade, the United States must act to assure that our correctional system has the means to equip these Americans with the knowledge and skills they will need to participate productively in our society.

(D) The development of a "Nation of Students" capable of and committed to the pursuit of formal and informal lifelong learning and literacy is essential to sustain both national and individual economic success and to provide a nurturing environment in which all children and youth can learn and achieve. Historically the most effective community resource for lifelong learning, the public library system of the United States should expand and restructure its delivery of services to take full advantage of the potential of new information technologies to meet the needs of learning communities.

(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the National Institute on Postsecondary Education, Libraries, and Lifelong Learning is to promote greater coordination of Federal research and development on issues related to adult learning and to carry out a program of research and development in adult learning to provide nonpartisan, research-based leadership to the United States as it seeks to improve libraries, postsecondary education, literacy, and lifelong learning throughout the United States. Such program—

(A) shall only support research and development in those areas of postsecondary education, libraries, literacy, and lifelong learning which are not being addressed by other entities within the Federal Government;

(B) may include basic and applied research, development, replication, and evaluation activities in areas such as—

(i) methods of assessing and evaluating individual, program, and institutional performance;

(ii) the uses and applications of new technologies to improve program effectiveness and enhance student learning;

(iii) the most effective training methods for adults to upgrade education and vocational skills;

(iv) opportunities for adults to continue their education beyond higher education and graduate school, in the context of lifelong learning and information-finding skills;

(v) adult literacy and effective methods, including technology, to eliminate illiteracy;

(vi) preparing students for a lifetime of work, the ability to adapt through retraining to the changing needs of the work force and the ability to learn new tasks;

(vii) the use of technology to develop and deliver effective training methods for adults to upgrade their education and their vocational skills; and

(viii) institutional and classroom policies and practices at the postsecondary level necessary to improve matriculation, persistence, achievement and graduation by students who are economically disadvantaged, ethnic and racial minorities, women, older, working, and who have children;

(ix) instructional practices and programs which are effective in correctional settings;

(x) new models of service delivery for public library systems which expand opportunities for lifelong learning;

(xi) effective programs and approaches which promote greater access to and success by minorities in postsecondary programs which prepare such minorities for scientific, technical, teaching, and health career fields;

(xii) effective teaching for the preparation and continuing education of teachers;

(xiii) the development and evaluation of curricular materials for the initial and continuing education of teachers and teacher educators;

(xiv) the role of Historically Black Colleges and Universities, Tribally-Controlled Indian Community Colleges, women's colleges, and other special mission institutions in providing access, excellence, and equal opportunity in higher education;

(xv) methods for evaluating the quality of education at different types of institutions of higher education at all levels and the roles and responsibilities of regional and national accrediting agencies;

(xvi) methods for evaluating the productivity of different types of institutions of higher education;

(I) the role of Federal programs authorized under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 and State grant and work programs in mitigating such barriers;

(III) the extent and impact of student reliance on loans to meet the costs of higher education;

(xviii) opportunities for adults to continue their education beyond higher education and graduate school, in the context of lifelong learning and information-finding skills; and

(xix) preparing students for a lifetime of work, the ability to adapt through retraining to the changing needs of the work force and the ability to learn new tasks; and

(xx) other topics relevant to mission of the Institute.

(3) INVOLVEMENT OF CERTAIN AGENCIES AND ORGANIZATIONS.—In promoting coordination and collaboration on research and development on issues related to postsecondary education, literacy, libraries, and lifelong learning, the Institute shall, as appropriate, seek the involvement—

Innovative Programs; Assessment; Evaluation: Both bills have provisions regarding grants and assistance the Secretary shall provide to urban and rural areas. The differences between the provisions are as follows:

(1) In the House bill, the grants and assistance are intended to assist urban and rural LEAs in developing and implementing local school improvement plans. In the Senate bill, the grants and assistance are for innovative and experimental programs in systemic education reform that are not being undertaken through grants under section 309(a) [Subgrants to LEAs]. Note: The House bill says that grants must be made "consistent with the provisions of section 209(a)". The Senate recedes, with the amendment that local educational agencies getting money under this provision cannot get money under section 309(a). (p. 185, 1st #222)

(2) In the House bill, grants and assistance may go to LEAs; the Senate bill says LEAs, schools, or consortia thereof. The House recedes, with an amendment to remove schools from the Senate provision. (p. 185, 2nd #222)

(3) Both bills say that grants and assistance must go to urban and rural LEAs (or, in the Senate bill, consortia, as described in note 2 above). The House bill says that the LEAs must have large numbers or concentrations of poor children or LEP children. The Senate bill says that the Secretary must give special consideration or priority to LEAs (or schools or consortia) that serve large numbers or concentrations or poor children, including LEP children. The Senate recedes. (p. 185, 3rd #222)

(4) The House bill reserves "at least 50%" of the national leadership funds for this subsection; the Senate bill reserves "not more than 50%" of the national leadership funds. Note: In the Senate bill, these reserved funds may also be used to provide grants and contracts for assessment development (see page 84a of side-by-side) The Senate recedes. (p. 185, 4th #222)

Innovative Programs; Assessment; Evaluation: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, requires the Secretary to use not less than $1,000,000 of the funds reserved for national leadership activities to survey coordinated services programs that have been found to be successful in helping students and families and in improving student outcomes. The Secretary is also required to disseminate information about such programs to schools that plan to develop coordinate service programs. The Senate recedes, with an amendment to replace "survey" with "replicate". (p. 186, #223)

The Senate recedes. (p. 186, #223a)

BIA COST ANALYSIS

In General: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, requires the Secretary of Interior to reserve an amount not to exceed $500,000 for the National Academy of Science, to do an analysis of the costs associated with meeting the academic and home-living residential standards of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Senate recedes. (p. 194, #224e)

PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

Authority: The Senate bill, but not the House bill, allows a State to submit, as part of its application under section 305, a request for a grant to develop a systemic statewide plan to increase the use of state-of-art technology in schools. The House receded. (p. 197, #226a)

Formula: The Senate bill, but not the House bill, would provide each State making a request for a grant an amount determined in the same basis as amounts are determined under subsections (b) and (c) of section 304, except that each State shall receive 1 and ½ percent of the amount appropriated for this program or $75,000, whichever is greater. The House recedes, with an amendment establishing the State minimum at $75,000. (p. 198, #226b)

MISCELLANEOUS

Khalid Abdul Mohammed: The Senate bill includes a sense of the Senate provision condemning the speech made by Khalid Abdul Mohammed at Kean College on November 29, 1993. The Senate recedes. (p. 204b, #226i)

The Senate amendment contains three provisions relating to voluntary prayer or mediation in public schools. Section 405 provided for the cut-off of all federal education funds to state or local educational agencies that have a policy that prevents constitutionally protected prayer in public schools. Section 418 provided that federal education funds shall not be denied to state or local educational agencies because they have adopted a constitutional policy relative to prayer in public schools. Section 406 expressed the sense of the Senate that schools should encourage a period of daily silence. The House bill contained no provision. The House recedes with an amendment providing that funds authorized to be appropriated by the Act may not be used by state or local educational agencies to adopt policies that prevent voluntary prayer and meditation in public schools.

Students do not shed their right to religious liberty at the schoolhouse gate, just as they do not lose other constitutional rights. In addition, private reflection is valuable in permitting children to draw strength from their personal values and beliefs so that they are prepared to learn and grow. Children would do well to take time each day to consider what they hope to accomplish and how their actions will affect themselves and others around them.

This section promotes these important values by providing that funds made available under this Act may not be used to adopt policies designed to prevent students from engaging in constitutionally protected prayer or silent reflection. The conferees do not intend that this section confer new legal rights. Instead, the section respects our long tradition of local control over educational decisions, while ensuring that funds made available under this Act are not spent preventing the exercise of cherished constitutional rights.

Funding for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act: The Senate bill includes a provision expressing the sense of the Senate that the Federal government should fully fund IDEA, through the reallocation on funds within the current budget monetary constraints. The House recedes, with an amendment specifying the expenditure would originate from the reallocation of non-educational funds. (p. 204d, #226m)

National Board for Professional Teaching Standards: The Senate bill includes a provision regarding the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards. The House recedes. (p. 204e, #226n)

Forgiveness of Certain Overpayments: The Senate bill includes a provision (Sec. 405) correcting a Department of Education error in Chapter One allocations to Colfax County, New Mexico. The House recedes. (p. 204f, #226o)

Study of Goals 2000 and Students with Disabilities: The Senate bill includes a provision of requiring the Secretary of Education to make arrangements with the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a study of the inclusion of children with disabilities in Goals 200 school reform activities. The House recedes, with an amendment stating that funding come from funds available to the Secretary for research related to individuals with disabilities, the Secretary shall make available, and to give the option to make arrangements with the National Academy of Sciences or the National Academy of Education. (p. 204g, #226p)

Amendments to Summer Youth Employment and Training Program: The Senate bill includes a provision amending the Summer Youth Employment and Training Program. The House recedes. (p. 204m, #226t)

Protection of Pupils: The Senate bill includes a provision which amends Section 439 of the General Education Provisions Act regarding students' right to privacy. The House recedes. It is the intent of the conferees that the language in Section 439, part a, referring to "any applicable program" applies to programs funded in whole or in part by the Department of Education. It is not intended to cover, nor does it cover, programs funded through other Departments or Agencies of the Federal government. It is also the intent of the conferees that full discretion is left to the local school district in deciding how to comply with the law. There are other federal education laws that require that certain notice be given to parents (FERPA) for example), and a school has discretion to determine their methodology. (p. 204o, #226u)

Contraceptive Devices: The Senate bill includes a provision instructing the Departments of Education and Health and Human Services to ensure that all federally funded programs which provide for the distribution of contraceptive devices to unemancipated minors encourage, to the extent practical, family participation in such programs. The House recedes. It is the intent of the conferees to make clear that, while family involvement is to be encouraged, to the extent practical, in federally funded programs which provide for the distribution of contraceptive devices to emancipated minors, nothing shall be construed to mandate parental consent or parental notification in accessing or utilizing these services. (p. 204r, #226v)

DEFINITIONS

Definitions: The House bill defines the terms "all student and all children" in the same definition and uses the term "students" throughout the definition; the Senate bill separates the definitions of the terms "all children" and "all students", but uses the same definition for both, and also uses the term "children" and the term "all students" in the appropriate definitions. The House bill, but not the Senate bill, includes American Indians, Alaska Natives, Native Hawaiians, and migrant children. The House bill refers to "school-aged children who have dropped out"; the Senate bill refers to "students who have dropped out of school". The Senate recedes, with the amendment that eliminates one of the two references to "migrant children" and replaces every instance of "students" or "children" with "students and children". (p. 239, #227)

Definitions: The House bill defines the term "assessment system" to mean at least 1 test, and may include other measures of student performance, for a specific purpose and use which are intended to evaluate the progress of all students in the State toward learning the material in State content standards in 1 or more subject areas; the Senate bill defines the term "assessment" to mean the overall process and instrument used to measure student attainment of content standards, except that such term need not include the discrete items that comprise each assessment. The House recedes, with an amendment changing the term to "State assessment" and defining the term as "means measures of student performance which includes at least one instrument of evaluation, and may include other measures of student performance, for a specific purpose and use which are intended to evaluate the progress of all students in the State toward learning the material in State content standards in one or more subject areas;" (p. 240, #228)

Definitions: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, defines the terms "community", "public", and "advocacy group," all in one definition. The Senate recedes. (p. 240, no #)

Definitions: The House bill includes the definitions of the terms "local educational agency" and "State educational agency" within the same definition and defines them as they are defined in section 1471 of ESEA; the Senate bill has separate definitions of the terms "local educational agency" and "State educational agency", and defines local educational agency to have the same meaning as under section 1471(12) of ESEA except that the term may include a public school council if such council is mandated by State law, and defines State educational agency as having the same meaning as under section 1471 (23) of ESEA. The Senate recedes. (p. 241, #229)

Definitions: The House bill defines "opportunity to learn standards" as the criteria for, and the basis of assessing the sufficiency or quality of the resources, practices, and conditions necessary at each level of the education system (schools, local educational agencies, and States) to provide all students with an opportunity to learn the material in national or State content standards; the Senate bill defines opportunity to learn as the conditions of teaching and learning necessary for all students to have a fair opportunity to learn, including ways of measuring the extent to which such standards are being met. The Senate recedes to the House definition of OTL standards, with the understanding that there be no definition in the act of the term "opportunity to learn strategies." The conferees chose not to include a definition of the term "opportunity to learn strategies" in order to acknowledge that the nature of such strategies will vary from state to state.

Definitions: The Senate bill, but not the House bill, includes the Freely Associated States in the definition of outlying areas. The House recedes. (p. 242, #231)

Definitions: The House bill refers to "school", but has a later provision specify that only public schools should receive assistance under title III; the Senate bill refers to "public school". The House recedes. (p. 242, #231a)

Definitions: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, includes the proviso of "except as otherwise provided" in its definition of "State", and includes the outlying areas in that definition. The Senate recedes. (p. 242, #232)

LIMITATIONS

Assessments: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, prohibits funds provided under titles II or III to be used to undertake assessments that will be used for high stakes purposes for a period of five years from the date of enactment of this Act. The conference agreement preserves the five-year restriction on high stakes uses for title II assessments, but it modifies the title III restriction to say that assessments developed with Title III funds may be used for high stakes decisions only if students have been prepared in the content for which they are being assessed.

ASSESSMENT OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS ACTIVITIES

Assessment: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, includes an amendment to the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Act to allow a State educational agency to use items and data from NAEP for the purpose of evaluating a course of study related to vocational education. The Senate recedes.

COMPLIANCE WITH BUY AMERICAN ACT

Compliance: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, requires that no funds appropriated pursuant to this Act may be expended by an entity unless the entity agrees that in expending the assistance the entity will comply with the Buy American Act. The Senate recedes, with an amendment making the provision a Sense of the Congress provision.

SENSE OF CONGRESS; REQUIREMENT REGARDING NOTICE

Purchase of American-Made Equipment and Products: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, includes a sense of the Congress that funds provided under this Act, when used for purchasing products, should purchase American made equipment and products, and requires the head of each Federal agency providing such assistance to notify each recipient of this statement. The Senate recedes.

PROHIBITION OF CONTRACTS

Prohibition: The House bill, but not the Senate bill, requires that if a court of law determines that person intentionally affixed a "Made in America" inscription on a foreign-made product, then that person shall be ineligible to receive funds under this Act. The Senate recedes, with an amendment making the provision a Sense of the Congress provision.

PARENTAL INFORMATION RESOURCE CENTERS

The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, includes a provision called Parental Information and Resource Centers. It authorizes the Secretary to make annual grants to nonprofit organizations to providing training and information to parents of children aged birth to 5 years, and children enrolled in participating schools, to individuals who work with such parents. The grants should be distributed geographically throughout the United States, include funds to establish, expand, and operate Parents as Teachers programs.

The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes a provision authorizing the Parents As Teachers Program.

The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes a section amending ESEA to allow 20% of a State's Even Start funds to be used to fund the Home Instruction Program for Preschool Youngsters (HIPPY).

On these three provisions, the Senate recedes, with an amendment including funding for Parents as Teachers and HIPPY programs in a modified provision called Parental Assistance.

ENVIRONMENTAL TOBACCO SMOKE

The Senate amendment includes Title XII regarding Environmental Tobacco Smoke, which provides that within 180 days after enactment the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) would issue guidelines for instituting and enforcing a non-smoking policy at each indoor facility where children's services are provided. The term "children" is defined to mean persons who have not attained the age of 18. Children's services include health services and other direct services routinely provided to children, including educational services that are funded, directly or indirectly, by federal funds. The policy would, at a minimum, prohibit smoking in each portion of an indoor facility where such services are provided that is not ventilated separately from other portions of the facility. The title would provide for technical assistance and civil penalties.

The House has no comparable provision.

The conference agreement adopts the Senate title with some revisions aimed at making the specified prohibitions self-executing. The agreement deleted from the Senate bill provisions mandating guidelines. The objective is to make it unnecessary to issue either guidelines or regulations. Indeed, the agreement does not include any provision authorizing guidelines or regulation. The conferees understand that in the context of enforcement, the Secretary of Health and Human Services may need to develop guidelines. Presumably, that would be a public process. The revisions provide for enforcement by the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

An "indoor facility" is defined as an enclosed building.

The conference agreement prohibits smoking within any indoor facility, or portion thereof, owned or leased or contracted for and utilized by the children's service provider to provide health, day care, or Head Start services to children or for the use of the employees of such provider. Where the health or day care or Head Start service is provided in a building that also has other uses, such as for law offices, retail establishments, or even for the making of steel of the building of cars, the prohibitions would not apply to those portions of the facility. However, any portion of the facility is covered to the extent it is routinely or regularly used by employees of the service provider.

The prohibitions apply for enforcement purposes to the person who provides the children's services. Any enforcement action would be against that person. The conferees intend that the official who controls the operation of the facility would be responsible for complying with the prohibitions.

The conference agreement does not apply to health programs for which Titles 18 or 19 of the Social Security Act are the sole sources of funding. However, programs such as Community or Migrant Health Centers which receive funds under the Public Health Services Act as well as Title 19 of the Social Security Act are covered by this agreement.

The conference agreement provides that the provision by federal agencies of routine or regular kindergarten, elementary, or secondary education or library services within the United States is to be governed by the facility-wide prohibition in the first sentence of section 1204(c), while the provision of such services by federal agencies outside the United States is to be governed by the prohibition in the second sentence of 1204(c).

One test of covered children's services is that they are provided by the service provider in an indoor facility whose services are funded, after the effective date of the title, with federal grant, loan, loan guarantee, or contract monies, either directly or through a state or local government, from either the Secretary of Education or the Secretary of Health and Human Services or from, in the case of clinics under the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, the Secretary of Agriculture. In the latter case, the conferees specifically referred to section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act and the Code of Federal Regulations to make it clear that it covers clinics and it does not include any food establishments (that are not clinics) where vouchers under that Act are redeemed. The second test is that the service provider provides the services in an indoor facility that is operated, constructed, or maintained with such funds provided after the effective date of the title from such Secretaries. Where these tests are met and the services identified above are provided to children, the applicable provisions apply.

In order to give the widest possible notice, the revisions provide that the prohibitions must be published by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in the Federal Register. Ninety days after publication, they will be effective. The Secretary is to consult with all the affected agencies. The conferees afford the Secretary up to 270 days to do this ministerial act. They intend that the Secretary act early in this period in order to provide the full 90-day lead time. If the Secretary delays, the prohibitions are automatically effective at the end of 270 days.

Enforcement is by either civil penalty or administrative compliance order, or both. The amendment spells out the procedures.

GUN-FREE SCHOOLS

The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, contains provisions amending the Elementary and Secondary Education Act requiring local educational agencies to adopt a policy to expel for at least one year students found to have brought a gun to school. The policy may authorize the superintendent to modify the expulsion on a case-by-case basis.

The House recedes. It is the intent of the conferees that local educational agencies adopt their own polices regarding the legitimate and illegitimate possession of guns by students on public school property based on the particular circumstances of the district and its public schools. The expulsion required under the amendment should be considered a minimum sanction for the violation of that particular school district's policy regarding gun possession and is not meant to be the only alternative for the treatment of a violator. Further, the amendment should be interpreted as applying to expulsion from the regular school program. It would not preclude the student violator's attendance in alternative educational programs or receipt of educational services outside the regular school program during the period of the expulsion.

MIDNIGHT BASKETBALL

The Senate bill includes a provision authorizing the establishment of a Midnight Basketball program in the Department of housing and Urban Development. The House bill includes no such provision. The House recedes.

YOUTH VIOLENCE IN SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITIES

The Senate bill includes a provision regarding Youth Violence in Schools and Communities. The House includes no such provision. The Senate recedes. However, it is the intent of the conferees to request that the Secretary of Education and the Attorney General jointly undertake a study of the scope of disciplinary measures available under State and Federal law to school districts and schools for dealing with violent behavior on school premises, and the types and sources of information, concerning, among other things, prior convictions and pending arrests for violent offenses, that schools and school districts should have access to in order to minimize violent behavior on school premises. The study shall identify any changes in law necessary to provide schools and school districts with necessary information.

GENERAL PROVISIONS REGARDING THE OFFICE OF EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH AND IMPROVEMENT

The House bill, but not the Senate bill, includes in its title "development, dissemination and excellence" along with "research".

The Senate recedes with an amendment to incorporate "improvement" into the title to read, "Educational Research, Development, Dissemination and Improvement."

The table of contents reflect differences of the bills.

The table will be redrawn to reflect the final bill.

The House bill, but not the Senate bill, lists findings.

The Senate recedes with editorial and clarifying changes to the text and adds "minorities" to the list of youths identified as educational research targets.

The Senate bill, but not the House bill removes OERI from the General Education Provisions Act.

The House recedes.

The House and Senate bills contain similar language contained in "policy/mission" of House bill and "purpose" of Senate bill.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to define the mission of the Office as one of expanding knowledge about education, promoting excellence and equity, promoting the use of research and monitoring the state of education.

Both bills authorize the Office to carry out the stated purposes. The Senate bill provides greater detail on the types of activities authorized. The House bill states that OERI will be guided by the priorities established by the Board.

The House recedes with an amendment to require that the Office be guided by a long-range plan which is developed by the Assistant Secretary, working collaboratively with the Board, and approved by the Board. It is the intent of the conferees that should there be disagreement between the Assistant Secretary and the Board during the development of the long-range plan on discrete items, final disposition of such items shall rest with the Assistant Secretary during the development process.

The Senate bill describes the functions of the Assistant Secretary as follows: provides for broad involvement in the planning of OERI activities, free from partisan influence; provides for standards for research; provides for a long-term agenda developed in consultation with the Board; provides information and technical assistance to States; and includes teacher advisory boards for all programs. The House has comparable provisions elsewhere in the bill.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the Assistant Secretary to develop a long-range plan, working collaboratively with the Board, which must subsequently be approved by the Board.

The House and Senate bills contain similar provisions concerning the administrative structure of the Office.

The conference substitute conforms the section to the final bill.

The House bill, but not the Senate bill, requires that certain research areas of the Institutes receive priority within OERI.

The House recedes.

Both bills contain similar provisions concerning the appointment of employees, with the added provisions in the House bill concerning public notice of vacancies and of opportunities to compete for such positions; and the requirement that such employees provide expertise that is not otherwise available among permanent employees.

The Senate recedes with an amendment requiring a public notice of vacancies of 30 days.

The House bill, but not the Senate bill, provides that the Assistant Secretary may publish reports without prior clearance once quality assurances have been met.

The Senate recedes.

Both bills require biennial reports be submitted to the Congress on the activities of the Office, the House bill by December 30th, the Senate bill by January 15th. The House bill spells out in more detail than the Senate bill what the report shall contain.

The Senate recedes with a conforming change.

The House bill provides for the coordination of education research within the Department and among the federal agencies. The bill requires the Assistant Secretary to compile and update an inventory of all federal education research. The Senate bill requires the Assistant Secretary to coordinate research activities within the Department of Education.

The Senate recedes with an amended first paragraph on coordination as follows, "With the advice and assistance of the Board, the Assistant Secretary shall work cooperatively with the Secretary and the other Assistant Secretaries of the Department to establish and maintain an ongoing program of activities designed to improve the coordination of education, research, development, and dissemination activities within the Department and within the Federal government . . ." The Secretary's report on federal research and development activities is amended to strike the word "all".

Both bills require the awards be made with the principles of peer review, in the House bill for awards above $100,000 and in the Senate bill for all awards, except for where it would be "clearly inappropriate". The House bill requires further that the Assistant Secretary establish standards for the evaluation of research and standards for the review panels.

The Senate recedes on the following sections of the contents of standards specified in the House bill: section (A) relating to a system of peer review, subsection (B)(iii) relating to a description of general procedures to be used in peer reviews, subsections (i) and (ii) of (C) concerning specific procedures to be used in evaluations, subsection (D)(i) and subsection (E)(i), concerning evaluations of performance.

The Senate bill requires that the Assistant Secretary develop standards. The House bill requires the same, but requires further that the proposed standards for evaluating research be published for comment and then be submitted to the Board for approval. The Senate bill requires that all awards be made through an open competition and peer review.

The conference substitute amends the section to merge all language in both bills.

The House and Senate bills have similar provisions concerning the Assistant Secretary's role on public involvement, long-range plans and research that is free from partisan influence. The House bill requires further that the Assistant Secretary be guided by the Research Priorities Plan and requires the Assistant Secretary to report by sex in the collection of data.

The conference substitute amends the section to merge all language in both bills.

The Senate bill, but not the House bill, requires an independent evaluation of the activities of OERI.

The House recedes with clarifying changes and an amendment which requires the Assistant Secretary to report the results of the evaluation within four years of enactment.

DEFINITIONS

The House bill but not the Senate bill defines "at-risk" student.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include "race" among the categories and to drop from the definition the phrase, "greater potential for dropping out of school", and insert instead, "reduced academic expectations." The conferees specifically included students "who because of . . . race . . . face a greater risk of low educational achievement or reduced academic expectations (emphasis added)" in the definition of at-risk student. It is the entent of the conferees that the Institute on At-Risk Students examine the causes and methods to improve, low identification and service of gifted and talented minorities.

Both bills have Boards, but the House bill includes in its definition "policy" and the Senate bill includes "advisory".

The Senate recedes.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill, but not the Senate bill, includes a definition for "national research institute".

The Senate recedes.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include the Virgin Islands and the outlying territories. We intend that the labs should continue to serve the outlying territories beginning in fiscal year 1996.

The Senate bill, but not the House bill includes a definition for the term "field-initiated research."

The House recedes.

The conference agreement deletes "remodelling" and adding language specifying that assistance for these measures is only available through the United States Department of Education if it is not available in other departments.

22. The Senate limits spending on security-related measures to 10%. The conference agreement provides for security-related measures to be funded at no more than 5%.

23. The Senate bill includes dissemination as a leadership activity; the House includes the production and distribution of video-based projects. The conference agreement combines the two activities together.

24. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, provides that the National Center on Educational Statistics to collect data on school violence. The House recedes.

IMPROVING AMERICA'S SCHOOLS ACT OF 1994

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 366 and rule

XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the Bill, H.R. 6.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, with Mr. PRICE of North Carolina in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, March 9, 1994, title V of the proposed Elementary and Secondary Education Act had been designated and is now open for amendment.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to indicate to all of my colleagues that H.R. 6 is to extend for 5 years the authorization of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. That is the purpose of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. I repeat that just so we do not get into the business of trying to reform all the school districts out there the way we think they would be reformed.

As I said, each time when we start this discussion it is just as wrong from my side of the aisle as from the other side of the aisle to micromanage school districts unless we are sending all the funds.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to title V?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF FLORIDA

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Florida: Beginning on page 456, strike line 5 and all that follows through line 15 on page 458 (and redesignate the subsequent parts accordingly).

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER] and I have been offering a series of amendments to cut some spending in this particular H.R. 6 bill.

Mr. Chairman, as we continue debate on H.R. 6, Mr. BOEHNER and I have focused on trying to bring some semblance of fiscal sanity to this Chamber, and to maintain some minimum level of autonomy for State and local officials to make the education decisions best suited for their unique circumstances.

And, here we go again. The technical assistance for funding equalization is another small, new spending program totaling $8 million for fiscal year 1995, intended to promote funding equalization on the State level. This spending is unnecessary. Not one cent of this $8 million will ever reach a student. It will only go to feed the education bureaucracy.

This program is based on the questionable assumption that equality of resources is somehow the key to solving our education problems in America. If pouring more money into education funding was the key to solving all our problems, we would not be debating this issue today. Unlike some Members of this body, I do not believe that Federal spending, per se, is the magical solution to improved education. As a nation, we are already spending more on the education of our children than our competitors with too few results to show for it.

We simply cannot afford to keep spending money we don't have.

Also, there is a presumption here that the States somehow need the Federal Government to teach them what is in their best interests. State and local education officials, and more importantly parents, disagree. They do not want important questions, such as funding equalization, determined by politicians and bureaucrats in Washington. In truth, nearly half of the States have already developed funding equity solutions without federal micromanaging. This program gets the Federal Government involved in an issue it has no business being involved in.

Before we attempt to get more involved in an issue that I believe is best left to States and parents, let's get our own fiscal house in order. We can start by passing the Boehner amendment, and eliminating another poorly thoughtout program from H.R. 6.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, and we accept his amendment.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer an amendment to eliminate an $8 million program which would give technical assistance to States and school districts so they can try to equalize their funding.

Let us look closely at what this program does. It provides for centers, conferences, and expert advice on finance equalization, research and analysis of school funding equity, and the development and dissemination of school finance models.

I must ask, should this be a Federal priority at all? Nearly half of the States have already undergone funding equity challenges and have been able to craft their own solutions without Federal help. This program is another Federal venture into an area better left to the States and is unneeded.

In addition, with this program, we are again looking at a situation where we are disrupting our focus and getting away from programs which would actually have an impact on the vast majority of American children. Let me ask, are we willing to take money away from title I to pay the bureaucrats called for in this program? Are we willing to take money away from chapter 2 or professional development? Do we really need to spend our resources on this program? Do we really want to say this is a Federal priority? The honest answer to these questions is "no."

I have argued throughout the consideration of this bill that we cannot have small targeted programs interfering with larger programs aimed at broad national educational concerns. This program is a small, targeted program and should be eliminated.

On a final note, I cannot help but think that the better way to help schools have adequate funding is to funnel this money directly to the students, instead of wasting it on bureaucrats.

I urge adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MRS. MINK OF HAWAII

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. MINK of Hawaii: Page 458, after line 10, insert the following:

SEC 5202. STATISTICAL AND POLICY ANALYSIS.

"(b) NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.—For the purpose of carrying out section 5203, there are authorized to be appropriated $3,865,000 to be available until expended.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer seeks to provide detailed and accurate information on the status of education financing across the country. It authorizes the National Center for Educational Statistics to collect and analyze data on school finances and requires the National Academy of Sciences to conduct an in-depth study on school finance issues.

Ensuring that all students have equal educational opportunities has always been a Federal priority and one of the greatest barriers to equity for many students is inadequate financing at a local level.

Currently, there are 34 States that have or are currently facing a legal challenge to their education financing system on the grounds that it is inequitable. As of November 1993, the financing system of 12 States have been ruled unconstitutional by a State supreme court. While the Federal Government has nothing to do with State school financing, it can play a significant role by assisting the States in developing adequate financing systems through data collection, analysis, and model development. Furthermore, many States are already moving toward equalizing education funding across school districts, as mandated by a court as part of systemwide school reform. However, this is not an easy task. States have been confronted with a host of legal, financial, and ethical issues.

As States continue to grapple with these issues, the Federal Government can help by giving us a better idea of what the stages have been doing, what success has been arrived at, and how that has resulted comparability of educational services for all children.

The National Center for Educational Statistics and the National Academy of Sciences are both well-respected institutions with the expertise and capability of collecting the necessary data, analyzing it, and putting forth a comprehensive study.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to provide us with the data information and analysis and a comprehensive examination of the school finance issues which will be of enormous help to the States that have these problems.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I hate to rise in opposition to the amendment of my dear friend, the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. MINK], but I do have some real concerns. I would hope the chairman would have hearings on this issue before we make this kind of an investment.

There are some concerns which I have, with this amendment. For instance, the proposal really goes beyond research because we are asking them to make recommendations which could be setting policies in a way that represents a new and unwarranted Federal intrusion into the very heart of State and local control of education; that is, taxing and funding decisions.

The actions required by the amendment may be the foundation activities for involving the Federal Government in creating funding equity across the States, so I would hope that we could delay this and have hearings on the whole issue, and perhaps come back and not include it in this reauthorization.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. MINK].

Mr. Chairman, this amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Hawaii adds a new part to the technical assistance for funding equity section for title V that will involve the National Center for Educational Statistics in collecting and analyzing data on this issue, and it creates a major study for funding of equity concerns, and I know the gentlewoman is sincere in offering this amendment, and she believes this data will help school districts and States around our country, but I have grave concerns that it is another mandate in this bill that takes away the focus of this bill and, more importantly, over 22 or 23 States have already dealt with the issue of funding equity. I believe that the States are the right place to continue this problem in our education system, and there is no role for the Federal Government to play in it.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. MINK] has brought to us an area of very great interest to all of us, something that we have expressed interest in for the last few authorizations, and I would like to do this:

I would like to have a hearing on this issue itself, and, if the gentlewoman, and I have talked to her, would be willing to withdraw this amendment, we would have hearings just on this one subject.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDEE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Hawaii.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter not of concern necessarily to the Congress, but certainly to the 30-plus States that are in a situation of having their financial systems contested by local communities, and so it is a vital issue, and the Congress has addressed it on several occasions. But I understand the other side indicating that perhaps it would be meritorious to have hearings, and with the assurance of the chairman of our subcommittee that hearings will be called shortly, Mr. Chairman, I will agree to withdrawing my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

Are there further amendments to this title?

If not, the Clerk will designate title VI.

The text of title VI is as follows:

"TITLE VI—INDIAN EDUCATION

"SEC. 6001. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) the Federal Government has a special responsibility to ensure that educational programs for all American Indian and Alaska Native children and adults—

"(A) are based on high-quality, internationally competitive content and student performance standards and build on Indian culture and the Indian community;

"(B) assist local educational agencies, Indian tribes, and others in providing Indian students the opportunity to achieve those standards; and

"(C) meet the special educational and culturally related academic needs of American Indian and Alaska Native students;

"(2) since enactment of the original Indian Education Act in 1972, Indian parents have become significantly more involved in the planning, development, and implementation of educational programs that affect them and their children, and schools should continue to foster such involvement;

"(3) although the numbers of Indian teachers, administrators, and university professors have increased since 1972, teacher training programs are not recruiting, training, or retraining sufficient numbers of Indian persons as educators to meet the needs of a growing Indian student population in elementary, secondary, vocational, adult, and higher education;

"(4) the dropout rate for Indian students is unacceptably high; for example, nine percent of Indian students who were eighth graders in 1988 had already dropped out of school by 1990;

"(5) from 1980 to 1990, the percentage of Indian persons living in poverty increased from 24 percent to 31 percent, and the readiness of Indian children to learn is hampered by the high incidence of poverty, unemployment, and health problems among Indian children and families; and

"(6) research related specifically to the education of Indian children and adults is very limited, and much of it is poor in quality or focused on limited local or regional issues.

"SEC. 6002. PURPOSE.

"(a) Purpose.—It is the purpose of this title to support the efforts of local educational agencies, Indian tribes and organizations, postsecondary institutions, and other entities to meet the special educational and culturally related academic needs of American Indians and Alaska Natives, so that they can achieve to the same challenging State performance standards expected of all students.

"(b) Programs Authorized.—This title carries out the purpose described in subsection (a) by authorizing programs of direct assistance for—

"(1) meeting the special educational and culturally related academic needs of American Indians and Alaska Natives;

"(2) the education of Indian children and adults;

"(3) the training of Indian persons as educators and counselors, and in other professions serving Indian people; and

"(4) research, evaluation, data collection, and technical assistance.

"(ii) 80 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the United States.

"(2) The Secretary shall reduce the amount of each allocation determined under paragraph (1) in accordance with subsection (e) of this section.

"(b) Minimum Grant Amount.—The Secretary shall not make a grant to a local educational agency if the amount determined under subsection (a) is less than $4,000, except that the Secretary may make a grant to a consortium of local educational agencies, one or more of which does not qualify for such a minimum award, if—

"(1) the total amount so determined for such agencies is not less than $4,000;

"(2) such agencies, in the aggregate, meet the eligibility requirement of either section 6102(1) or 6102(2); and

"(3) the Secretary determines that such a grant would be effectively used to carry out the purpose of this part.

"(c) Definition.—For the purpose of this section, the average per-pupil expenditure of a State is determined by dividing—

"(1) the aggregate current expenditures of all the local educational agencies in the State, plus any direct current expenditures by the State for the operation of such agencies, without regard to the sources of funds from which such local or State expenditures were made, during the second fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the computation is made; by

"(c) SCHOOLWIDE PROGRAMS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, a local educational agency may use funds it receives under this part to support a schoolwide program under section 1114 of title I of this Act, in accordance with such section, if the Secretary determines that the local educational agency has made adequate provision for the participation of Indian children in such project and the involvement of Indian parents in the formulation of such project.

"SEC. 6106. STUDENT ELIGIBILITY FORMS.

"(a) The Secretary shall require that each application for a grant under this subpart for each fiscal year be supported by a form, maintained in the files of the applicant, for each eligible Indian child for whom the local educational agency is providing free public education that sets forth information establishing the status of the child as an eligible Indian child.

"(b) The Secretary shall request on the form required under subsection (a) at least the following information:

"(1) either—

"(A) the name of the tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians with which the child claims membership, along with the enrollment number establishing membership (if readily available), and the name and address of the organization which has updated and accurate membership data for such tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians, or

"(B) if the child is not a member of a tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians, the name, the enrollment number (if readily available), and the organization (and address thereof) responsible for maintaining updated and accurate membership rolls of any of the child's parents or grandparents, from whom the child claims eligibility;

"(1) the child's name;

"(2) the name of the tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians; and

"(3) the parent's dated signature.

The failure of an applicant to furnish any other information listed in subsection (b) with respect to any child shall have no bearing on the determination of whether the child is an eligible Indian child.

"(d) The forms and the standards of proof (including the standard of good faith compliance) that were in use during the 1985–1986 academic year to establish a child's eligibility for entitlement under the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act shall be the only forms and standards of proof used to establish such eligibility and to meet the requirements of subsection (a).

"(e) For purposes of determining whether a child is an eligible Indian child, the membership of the child, or any parent or grandparent of the child, in a tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians may be established by proof other than an enrollment number, even if enrollment numbers for members of such tribe, band, or groups are available. Nothing in subsection (b) may be construed as requiring the furnishing of enrollment numbers.

"(B) For purposes of an audit conducted by the Federal Government with respect to funds provided under this part, all procedures, practices, and policies that are established by—

"(i) the Office of Indian Education of the Department of Education, or

"(ii) a grantee under this subpart who, in establishing such procedures, practices, and policies, was acting under the direction of any employee of such Office that is authorized by the Director of such Office to provide such direction, shall, with respect to the period beginning on the date of the establishment of such procedures, practices, and policies, and ending on the date (if any) on which the Director of such Office revokes authorization for such procedures, practices, and policies, be considered appropriate and acceptable procedures, practices, and policies which are in conformity with Federal law.

"(C) A local educational agency may not be held liable to the United States, or be otherwise penalized, by reason of the findings of an audit that relate to the date of completion, or the date of submission, of any forms used to establish, before April 28, 1988, a child's eligibility for entitlement under the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act.

"(2) Any local educational agency that provides false information in the application for a grant under this subpart shall be ineligible to apply for any other grants under this part and shall be liable to the United States for any funds provided under this part that have not been expended.

"(3) Any student who provides false information on the form required under subsection (d)(1) may not be taken into account in determining the amount of any grant under this part.

"(g) For purposes of distribution of funds under this Act to schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary shall use the count of the number of students in each such school funded under the Indian Student Equalization Formula developed pursuant to section 1128 of Public Law 95–561, in lieu of the requirements of this section.

"(c) REDUCTION OF PAYMENT FOR FAILURE TO MAINTAIN FISCAL EFFORT.—(1) The Secretary shall not pay any local educational agency the full amount determined under section 6103 for any fiscal year unless the State educational agency notifies the Secretary, and the Secretary determines, that the combined fiscal effort of that local agency and the State with respect to the provision of free public education by such local agency for the preceding fiscal year, computed on either a per-student or aggregate expenditure basis, was not less than 90 percent of such combined fiscal effort, computed on the same basis, for the second preceding fiscal year.

"(2) If the Secretary determines for any fiscal year that a local educational agency failed to maintain its fiscal effort at the 90 percent level required by paragraph (1), the Secretary shall—

"(A) reduce the amount of the grant that would otherwise be made to the agency under this part in the exact proportion of such agency's failure to maintain its fiscal effort at such level; and

"(B) not use the reduced amount of the agency's expenditures for the preceding year to determine compliance with paragraph (1) for any succeeding fiscal year, but shall use the amount of expenditures that would have been required to comply with paragraph (1).

"(3)(A) The Secretary may waive the requirement of paragraph (1), for not more than one year at a time, if the Secretary determines that the failure to comply with such requirement is due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances, such as a natural disaster or a precipitous and unforeseen decline in the agency's financial resources.

"(B) The Secretary shall not use the reduced amount of such agency's expenditures for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which a waiver is granted to determine compliance with paragraph (1) for any succeeding fiscal year, but shall use the amount of expenditures that would have been required to comply with paragraph (1) in the absence of the waiver.

"(d) REALLOCATIONS.—The Secretary may reallocate, in the manner the Secretary determines will best carry out the purpose of this part, any amounts that—

"(1) based on estimates by local educational agencies or other information, will not be needed by such agencies to carry out their approved projects under this part; or

"PART G—BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS PROGRAMS

"SEC. 6701. STANDARDS FOR THE BASIC EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN IN BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS SCHOOLS.

"(a) The purpose of the standards developed under this section shall be to afford Indian students being served by a Bureau funded school with the same opportunities as all other students to achieve the high goals embodied in the Goals 2000: Educate America Act. Consistent with the provisions of this section and section 6711 of this part, the Secretary shall take such actions as are necessary to coordinate standards developed and implemented under this section with those in the State plans developed and implemented pursuant to the GOALS 2000 Educate America Act for the States in which each Bureau funded school operates. In developing and reviewing these standards and such coordination, the Secretary shall utilize the findings and recommendations of the panel established by the Goals 2000: Educate America Act

"(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Education, and in consultation with Indian organizations and tribes, shall carry out or cause to be carried out by contract with an Indian organization such studies and surveys, making the fullest use possible of other existing studies, surveys, and plans, as are necessary to establish and revise standards for the basic education of Indian children attending Bureau funded schools. Such studies and surveys shall take into account factors such as academic needs, local cultural differences, type and level of language skills, geographic isolation, and appropriate teacher-student ratios for such children, and shall be directed toward the attainment of equal eductional opportunity for such children.

"(c)(1) Within 18 months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall revise the minimum academic standards published in the Federal Register of November 1983 for the basic education of Indian children which are consistent with subsections (a) and (b) of this section and section 6711, and shall distribute such revised standards in the Federal Register for the purpose of receiving comments from the tribes and other interested parties. Within 21 months of the date of enactment of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act Amendments of 1993, the Secretary shall establish final standards, distribute such standards to all the tribes and publish such standards in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall revise such standards periodically as necessary. Prior to any revision of such standards, the Secretary shall distribute such proposed revision to all the tribes, and publish such proposed revision in the Federal Register, for the purpose of receiving comments from the tribes and other interested parties.

"(2) Such standards shall apply to Bureau schools, and subject to subsection (f), to contract and grant schools, and may also serve as a model for educational programs for Indian children in public schools. In establishing and revising such standards, the Secretary shall take into account the special needs of Indian students and the support and reinforcement of the specific cultural heritage of each tribe. Such standards shall include a requirement, developed in coordination with Indian tribes, the affected local school boards, the Indian Health Service of the Department of Health and Human Services, the State health departments, and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, on immunization for childhood diseases, including provisions for in-school immunization, where necessary.

"(d) The Secretary shall provide alternative or modified standards in lieu of the standards established under subsection (c), where necessary, so that the programs of each school shall be in compliance with the minimum standards required for accreditation of schools in the State where the school is located.

"(e) A tribal governing body, or the local school board so designated by the tribal governing body, shall have the local authority to waive, in part or in whole, the standards established under subsections (c) and (d), where such standards are deemed by such body to be inappropriate or ill-conceived. The tribal governing body or designated school board shall, within 60 days thereafter, submit to the Secretary a proposal for alternative standards that takes into account the specific needs of the tribe's children. Such revised standards shall be established by the Secretary unless specifically rejected by the Secretary for good cause and in writing to the affected tribes or local school board, which rejection shall be final and unreviewable.

"(f)(1) The Secretary, through contracting and grant-making procedures, shall assist school boards of contract and grant schools in the implementation of the standards established under subsection (c) and (d), if the school boards request that such standards, in part or in whole, be implemented. At the request of a contract or grant school board, the Secretary shall provide alternative or modified standards for the standards established under subsections (c) and (d) to take into account the needs of the Indian children and the contract or grant school.

"(2) Within 1 year of the date of the enactment of the Indian Education Technical Amendments Act of 1985, the Bureau shall, either directly or through contract with an Indian organization, establish a consistent system of reporting standards for fiscal control and fund accounting for all contract schools. Such standards shall yield data results comparable to those used by Bureau schools.

"(g) Subject to subsections (e) and (f), the Secretary shall begin to implement the standards established under this section immediately upon the date of their establishment. No later than January 1, 1995, and at each time thereafter that the annual budget request for Bureau educational services is presented, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a detailed plan to bring all Bureau and contract and grant schools up to the level required by the applicable standards established under this section. Such plan shall include, but not be limited to, detailed information on the status of each school's educational program in relation to the applicable standards established under this section, specific cost estimates for meeting such standards at each school, and specific time lines for bringing each school up to the level required by such standards.

"(h)(1) Except as specifically required by statute, no school or peripheral dormitory operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs on or after January 1, 1992, may be closed or consolidated or have its program substantially curtailed unless done according to the requirements of this subsection, except that, in those cases where the tribal governing body, or the local school board concerned (if so designated by the tribal governing body), requests closure or consolidation, the requirements of this subsection shall not apply. The requirements of this subsection shall not apply when a temporary closure, consolidation, or substantial curtailment is required by plant conditions which constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety.

"(2) The Secretary shall, by regulation, promulgate standards and procedures for the closing, consolidation, or substantial curtailment of Bureau schools in accordance with the requirements of this subsection.

"(3) Whenever closure, transfer to any other authority, consolidation, or substantial curtailment of a school is under active consideration or review by any division of the Bureau or the Department of the Interior, the affected tribe, tribal governing body, and designated local school board, will be notified as soon as such consideration or review begins, kept fully and currently informed, and afforded an opportunity to comment with respect to such consideration or review. When a formal decision is made to close, transfer to any other authority, consolidate, or substantially curtail a school, the affected tribe, tribal governing body, and designated local school board shall be notified at least 6 months prior to the end of the school year preceding the proposed effective date. Copies of any such notices and information shall be transmitted promptly to the Congress and published in the Federal Register.

"(4) The Secretary shall make a report to Congress, the affected tribe, and the designated local school board describing the process of the active consideration or review referred to in paragraph (3). At a minimum, the report shall include a study of the impact of such action on the student population, with every effort to identify those students with particular educational and social needs, and to ensure that alternative services are available to such students.

Such report shall include the description of the consultation conducted between the potential service provider, current service provider, parents, tribal representative and the tribe or tribes involved, and the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs within the Bureau regarding such students. No irreversible action may be taken in furtherance of any such proposed school closure, transfer to any other authority, consolidation, or substantial curtailment (including any action which would prejudice the personnel or programs of such school) until the end of the first full academic year after such report is made.

“(5) The Secretary may terminate, contract, transfer to any other authority, or consolidate or substantially curtail the operation or facilities of—

“(A) any Bureau funded school that is operated on or after April 1, 1987,

“(B) any program of such a school that is operated on or after April 1, 1987, or

“(C) any school board of a school operated under a grant under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988 (Public Law 100–297), only if the tribal governing body approves such action.

“(i) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary, for academic program costs, in order to bring all Bureau and contract schools up to the level required by the applicable standards established under this section.

“(j)(1) All schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall include within their curriculum a program of instruction relating to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. The Assistant Secretary shall provide the technical assistance necessary to develop and implement such a program for students in kindergarten and grades 1 through 12, at the request of—

“(A) any Bureau of Indian Affairs school (subject to the approval of the school board of such school);

“(B) any school board of a school operating under a contract entered into under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.); or

“(C) any school board of a school operating under a grant under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988 (Public Law 100–297).

“(2) In schools operated directly by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary shall provide for—

“(A) accurate reporting of all incidents relating to alcohol and substance abuse; and

“(B) individual student crisis intervention.

“(3) The programs requested under paragraph (1) shall be developed in consultation with the Indian tribe that is to be served by such program and health personnel in the local community of such tribe.

“(4) Schools requesting program assistance under this subsection are encouraged to involve family units and, where appropriate, tribal elders and Native healers in such instructions.

“(k) For purposes of this section, the term ‘tribal governing body’ means, with respect to any school, the tribal governing body, or tribal governing bodies, that represent at least 90 percent of the students served by such school.

“(l)(1)(A) The Secretary shall only consider the factors described in subparagraphs (B) and (C) in reviewing—

“(i) applications from any tribe for the awarding of a contract or grant for a school that is not a Bureau funded school, and

“(ii) applications from any tribe or school board of any Bureau funded school for—

“(I) a school which is not a Bureau funded school; or

“(II) the expansion of a Bureau funded school which would increase the amount of funds received by the Indian tribe or school board under section 6707.

The Secretary shall give consideration to all of such factors, but none of such applications may be denied based primarily upon the geographic proximity of public education.

“(B) The Secretary shall consider the following factors relating to the program that is the subject of an application described in subparagraph (A):

“(i) the adequacy of facilities or the potential to obtain or provide adequate facilities;

“(ii) geographic and demographic factors in the affected areas;

“(iii) adequacy of the applicant's program plans or, in the case of a Bureau funded school, of projected needs analysis done either by a tribe or by Bureau personnel;

“(iv) geographic proximity of comparable public education; and

“(v) the stated needs of all affected parties, including (but not limited to) students, families, tribal governments at both the central and local levels, and school organizations.

“(C) The Secretary shall consider with respect to applications described in subparagraph (A) the following factors relating to all the educational services available at the time the application is considered:

“(i) geographic and demographic factors in the affected areas;

“(ii) adequacy and comparability of programs already available;

“(iii) consistency of available programs with tribal educational codes or tribal legislation on education; and

“(iv) the history and success of these services for the proposed population to be served, as determined from all factors and not just standardized examination performance.

“(2)(A) The Secretary shall make a determination of whether to approve any application described in paragraph (1)(A) by no later than the date that is 180 days after the day on which such application is submitted to the Secretary.

“(B) If the Secretary fails to make the determination described in subparagraph (A) with respect to an application by the date described in subparagraph (A), the application shall be treated as having been approved by the Secretary.

“(3)(A) Any application described in paragraph (1)(A) may be submitted to the Secretary only if—

“(i) the application has been approved by the tribal governing body of the students served by (or to be served by) the school or program that is the subject of the application, and “(ii) written evidence of such approval is submitted with the application.

“(B) Each application described in paragraph (1)(A)—

“(i) shall provide information concerning each of the factors described in paragraph (1)(B), and “(ii) may provide information concerning the factors described in paragraph (1)(C).

“(4) Whenever the Secretary makes a determination to deny approval of any application described in paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall—

“(A) state the objections in writing to the applicant by no later than the date that is 180 days after the day on which the application is submitted to the Secretary,

“(B) provide assistance to the applicant to overcome stated objections, and

“(C) provide the applicant a hearing, under the same rules and regulations pertaining to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, and an opportunity to appeal the objections raised by the Secretary.

“(5)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the action which is the subject of any application described in paragraph (1)(A) that is approved by the Secretary shall become effective with the commencement of the academic year succeeding the fiscal year in which the application is approved, or at an earlier date determined by the Secretary.

“(B) If an application is treated as having been approved by the Secretary by reason of paragraph (2)(B), the action that is the subject of the application shall become effective on the date that is 18 months after the date on which the application is submitted to the Secretary, or at an earlier date determined by the Secretary.

“SEC. 6702. NATIONAL CRITERIA FOR DORMITORY SITUATIONS.

“(a) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Department of Education, and in consultation with Indian organizations and tribes, shall conduct or cause to be conducted by contract with an Indian organization, a study of the costs applicable to boarding arrangements for Indian students provided in Bureau and contract and grant schools, for the purpose of establishing national criteria for such dormitory situations. Such criteria shall include adult-child ratios, needs for counselors (including special needs related to off-reservation boarding arrangements), space, and privacy.

“(b) No later than January 1, 1996, the Secretary shall propose such criteria, and shall distribute such proposed criteria to the tribes and publish such proposed criteria in the Federal Register for the purpose of receiving comments from the tribes and other interested parties. Within eighteen months of the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish final criteria, distribute such criteria to all the tribes, and publish such criteria in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall revise such criteria periodically as necessary. Any revisions to the standards established under this section shall be developed subject to requirements established under section 6711.

“(c) The Secretary shall begin to implement the criteria established under this section immediately upon the date of their establishment. No later than January 1, 1981, and at each time thereafter that the annual budget request for Bureau educational services is presented, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a detailed plan to bring all Bureau and contract boarding schools up to the criteria established under this section. Such plan shall include, but not be limited to, predictions for the relative need for each boarding school in the future, detailed information on the status of each school in relation to the criteria established under this section, specific cost estimates for meeting such criteria at each school, and specific time lines for bringing each school up to the level required by such criteria.

“(d)(1) The criteria established under this section may be waived in the same manner as the standards provided under section 6701(c) may be waived under section 6701(e).

“(2) No school in operation on or before January 1, 1987 (regardless of compliance or noncompliance with the criteria established under this section) may be closed, transferred to another authority, consolidated or have its program substantially curtailed for failure to meet the criteria.

“(3) By no later than May 1, 1996, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report detailing the costs associated with, and the actions necessary for, complete compliance with the criteria established under this section.

“(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary in order to bring each school up to the level required by the criteria established under this section.

“SEC. 6703. REGULATIONS.

“(a) The provisions of part 32 of title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on January 1, 1987, are hereby incorporated into this Act and shall be treated as though such provisions are set forth in this subsection. Accordingly, such provisions may be altered only by means of an amendment to this subsection that is contained in an Act or joint resolution which is enacted into law. To the extent that such provisions of part 32 do not conform with this Act or any statutory provision of law enacted before the date of enactment of this Act, the provisions of this Act and the provisions of such other statutory law shall govern.

"(b) The provisions of parts 31, 33, 36, 39, 42, and 43 of title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on January 1, 1987, shall be applied by the Federal Government and shall not, before July 1, 1989, be amended, revoked, or altered in any manner. No officer or employee of the Executive Branch shall have the authority to issue any other regulations, prior to July 1, 1989, that supersede, supplement, or otherwise affect the provisions of such parts. To the extent that the provisions of such parts do not conform with this Act or any statutory provision of law enacted before the date of enactment of this Act, the provisions of this Act and the provisions of such other statutory law shall govern.

"(c) After June 30, 1989, no regulation prescribed for the application of any program provided under this title shall become effective unless—

"(1) the regulation has been published as a proposed regulation in the Federal Register,

"(2) an opportunity of no less than 90 days has been afforded the public to comment on the published proposed regulation, and

"(3) the regulation has, after such period for public comment, been published in the Federal Register as a final regulation.

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term 'regulation' means any rules, regulations, guidelines, interpretations, orders, or requirements of general applicability prescribed by any officer or employee of the Executive Branch.

"SEC. 6704. SCHOOL BOUNDARIES.

"(a) The Secretary shall, in accordance with this section, establish separate geographical attendance areas for each Bureau school.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), on or after July 1, 1985, no attendance area shall be changed or established with respect to any such school unless the tribal governing body or the local school board concerned (if so designated by the tribal governing body) has been (i) afforded at least six months notice of the intention of the Bureau to change or establish such attendance area, and (ii) given the opportunity to propose alternative boundaries. Any tribe may petition the Secretary for revision of existing attendance area boundaries. The Secretary shall accept such proposed alternative or revised boundaries unless the Secretary finds, after consultation with the affected tribe or tribes, that such revised boundaries do not reflect the needs of the Indian students to be served or do not provide adequate stability to all of the affected programs.

"(2) In any case where there is more than 1 Bureau funded school located on an Indian reservation, at the direction of the tribal governing body, the relevant school boards of the Bureau funded schools on the reservation may, by mutual consent, establish the relevant attendance areas for such schools, subject to the approval of the tribal governing body. Any such boundaries so established shall be accepted by the Secretary.

"(c) In any case where there is only 1 Bureau operated program located on an Indian reservation, the attendance area for the program shall be the boundaries of the reservation served, and those students residing near the reservation shall also receive services from such program.

"(d) The Bureau of Indian Affairs shall include in the final rules the requirement that each appropriate education line officer coordinate and consult with the affected tribes and relevant school boards in the establishment of such geographic boundaries.

"SEC. 6705. FACILITIES CONSTRUCTION.

"(a) The Secretary shall immediately begin to bring all schools, dormitories, and other facilities operated by the Bureau or under contract or grant with the Bureau in connection with the education of Indian children into compliance with all applicable Federal, tribal, or State health and safety standards, whichever provide greater protection (except that the tribal standards to be applied shall be no greater than any otherwise applicable Federal or State standards), and with section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794) and with the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, except that nothing in this section shall require termination of the operations of any facility which does not comply with such provisions and which is in use on the date of enactment of this Act.

"(b) By January 1, 1996, and at each time thereafter that the annual budget request for Bureau educational services is presented, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a detailed plan to bring such facilities into compliance with such standards. Such plan shall include, but not be limited to, detailed information on the status of each facility's compliance with such standards, specific cost estimates for meeting such standards at each school, and specific time lines for bringing each school into compliance with such standards.

"(c) Within six months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress, and publish in the Federal Register, the system used to establish priorities for school construction projects. At the time any budget request for school construction is presented, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register and submit with the budget request the current list of all school construction priorities.

"(d)(1) A Bureau school may be closed or consolidated, and the programs of a Bureau school may be substantially curtailed, by reason of plant conditions that constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety only if a health and safety officer of the Bureau determines that such conditions exist at the Bureau school.

"(2)(A) In making determinations described in paragraph (1) before July 1, 1989, health and safety officers of the Bureau shall use the health and safety guidelines of the Bureau that were in effect on January 1, 1988.

"(B)(i) If—

"(I) the Secretary fails to publish in the Federal Register in final form before July 1, 1989, and

"(II) action described in paragraph (1) is taken after June 30, 1989, and before the date on which such regulations are published in final form in the Federal Register by reason of the condition of any plant, an inspection of the condition of such plant shall be conducted by an appropriate tribal, county, municipal, or State health and safety officer to determine whether conditions at such plant constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety. Such inspection shall be completed by no later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the action described in paragraph (1) is taken.

"(ii) The inspection required under clause (i) shall be conducted by a health and safety officer designated jointly by the Secretary and the tribes affected by the action described in paragraph (1). If the Secretary and such tribes are unable to agree on the designation of the health and safety officer, the Secretary shall designate the health and safety officer and shall provide notice of such designation to each of such tribes before the inspection is conducted by such officer.

"(iii) If the health and safety officer conducting an inspection of a plant required under clause (i) determines that conditions at the plant do not constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety, any consolidation or curtailment that was made by reason of conditions at the plant shall immediately cease and any school closed by reason of conditions at the plant shall be reopened immediately.

"(3) If—

"(A) a Bureau school is temporarily closed or consolidated, or the programs of a Bureau school are substantially curtailed, by reason of plant conditions that constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety, and

"(B) the Secretary estimates that the closure, consolidation, or curtailment will be more than 1 year in duration, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress, by no later than the date that is 6 months after the date on which the closure, consolidation, or curtailment is initiated, a report which sets forth the reasons for such temporary actions and the actions the Secretary is taking to eliminate the conditions that constitute the hazard.

"(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out subsection (a).

"SEC. 6706. BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS EDUCATION FUNCTIONS.

"(a) The Secretary shall vest in the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs all functions with respect to formulation and establishment of policy and procedure, and supervision of programs and expenditures of Federal funds for the purpose of Indian education administered by the Bureau. The Assistant Secretary shall carry out such functions through the Director of the Office of Indian Education.

"(b) The Director of the Office shall direct and supervise the operations of all personnel directly and substantially involved with provision of education services by the Bureau, including (but not limited to) school or institution custodial or maintenance personnel. The Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs shall provide for the adequate coordination between the affected Bureau Offices and the Office to facilitate the consideration of all contract functions relating to education. Except as required by section 6709(d), nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the provision of separate support services for Indian education.

"(c) Education personnel who are under the direction and supervision of the Director of the Office in accordance with the first sentence of subsection (b) shall—

"(1) monitor and evaluate Bureau education programs,

"(2) provide all services and support functions for education programs with respect to personnel matters involving staffing actions and functions, and

"(3) provide technical and coordinating assistance in areas such as procurement, contracting, budgeting, personnel, and curriculum.

"(d)(1) The Assistant Secretary shall submit in the annual Budget a plan—

"(A) for school facilities to be constructed under the system required by section 6705(c);

"(B) for establishing priorities among projects and for the improvement and repair of education facilities, which together shall form the basis for the distribution of appropriated funds; and

"(C) including a 5-year plan for capital improvements.

"(2) The Assistant Secretary shall establish a program, including the distribution of appropriated funds, for the operation and maintenance of education facilities. Such program shall include, but not be limited to—

"(A) a method of computing the amount necessary for each education facility;

"(B) similar treatment of all Bureau funded schools;

"(C) a notice of an allocation of appropriated funds from the Director of the Office directly to the appropriate education line officers; and

"(D) a system for the conduct of routine preventive maintenance.

The appropriate education line officers shall make arrangements for the maintenance of education facilities with the local supervisors of the Bureau maintenance personnel who are under the authority of the agency superintendent or area directors, respectively. The local supervisors of Bureau maintenance personnel shall take appropriate action to implement the decisions made in this regard by the appropriate education line officers, except that no funds from this program may be authorized for expenditure unless such appropriate education line officer is assured that the necessary maintenance has been, or will be, provided in a reasonable manner. Subject to the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the provision of separate operations and maintenance personnel for the Office.

"(3) The requirements of this subsection shall be implemented no later than July 1, 1995.

"(e) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, the Director shall promulgate guidelines for the establishment of mechanisms for the acceptance of gifts and bequests for the use of, and benefit of, particular schools or designated Bureau operated education programs, including, where appropriate, the establishment and administration of trust funds. When a Bureau operated program is the beneficiary of such a gift or bequest, the Director shall make provisions for monitoring its use, and shall report to the appropriate committees of Congress the amount and terms of such gift and bequest, the use to which it is put, and any positive results achieved by such action.

"(f) For the purpose of this section the term 'functions' includes powers and duties.

"SEC. 6707. ALLOTMENT FORMULA.

"(a) The Secretary shall establish, by regulation adopted in accordance with section 6719, a formula for determining the minimum annual amount of funds necessary to sustain each Bureau funded school. In establishing such formula, the Secretary shall consider—

"(1) the number of eligible Indian students served and size of the school;

"(2) special cost factors, such as—

"(A) isolation of the school;

"(B) need for special staffing, transportation, or educational programs;

"(C) food and housing costs;

"(D) maintenance and repair costs associated with the physical condition of the educational facilities;

"(E) special transportation and other costs of isolated and small schools;

"(F) the costs of boarding arrangements, where determined necessary by a tribal governing body or designated local school board;

"(G) costs associated with greater lengths of service by educational personnel; and

"(H) special programs for gifted and talented students;

"(3) the cost of providing academic services which are at least equivalent to those provided by public schools in the State in which the school is located; and

"(4) such other relevant factors as the Secretary determines are appropriate.

Upon the establishment of the standards required by sections 6701 and 6702 of this Act, the Secretary shall revise the formula established under this subsection to reflect the cost and funding standards so established. Prior to January 1, 1995, the Secretary shall review the formula established under this section and shall take such steps as may be necessary to increase the availability of counseling services for students in off-reservation boarding schools and other Bureau operated residential facilities. Concurrent with such action, the Secretary shall review the standards established under section 6701 of this title to be certain that adequate provision is made for parental notification regarding, and consent for, such counseling services.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, Federal funds appropriated for the general local operation of Bureau funded schools, shall be allotted pro rata in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a).

"(c)(1) For fiscal year 1990, and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary shall adjust the formula established under subsection (a) to—

"(A) use a weighted unit of 1.2 for each eligible Indian student enrolled in the seventh and eighth grades of the school in considering the number of eligible Indian students served by the school;

"(B) consider a school with an enrollment of less than 50 eligible Indian students as having an average daily attendance of 50 eligible Indian students for purposes of implementing the adjustment factor for small schools; and

"(C) take into account the provision of residential services on a less than 9-month basis at a school when the school board and supervisor of the school determine that a less than 9-month basis will be implemented for the school year involved.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall reserve for national school board training 0.2 percent of the funds appropriated for each fiscal year for distribution under this section. Such training shall be conducted through the same organizations through which, and in the same manner in which, the training was conducted in fiscal year 1992. If the contract for such training is not awarded before May 1 of each fiscal year, the contract under which such training was provided for the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year shall be renewed by the Secretary for such fiscal year. The agenda for the training sessions shall be established by the school boards through their regional or national organizations.

"(B) For each year in which the Secretary uses a weighted unit formula established under subsection (a) to fund Bureau schools, a Bureau school which generates less than 168 weighted units shall receive an additional 2 weighted units to defray school board activities.

"(C) From the funds allotted in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a) for each Bureau school, the local school board of such school may reserve an amount which does not exceed the greater of—

"(i) $5,000, or

"(ii) the lesser of—

"(I) $15,000, or

"(II) 1 percent of such allotted funds, for school board activities for such school, including but not limited to, and notwithstanding any other provision of law, meeting expenses and the cost of membership in, and support of, organizations engaged in activities on behalf of Indian education.

"(3)(A) The Secretary shall adjust the formula established under subsection (a) to use a weighted unit of 2.0 for each eligible Indian student that—

"(i) is gifted and talented (as determined pursuant to section 6204 of the Indian Education Act of 1988), and

"(ii) is enrolled in the school on a full-time basis, in considering the number of eligible Indian students served by the school.

"(B) The adjustment required under subparagraph (A) shall be used for the later of the following fiscal years and for each fiscal year succeeding such later fiscal year:

"(i) the second fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year in which the Secretary of Education makes the report required under section 6204(c)(6)(B) of the Indian Education Act of 1988, or

"(ii) the first fiscal year for which an increase in the amount of funds appropriated for allotment under this section is designated by the law that appropriates such funds as the amount necessary to implement such adjustment without reducing allotments made under this section to any school.

"(d) The Secretary shall reserve from the funds available for distribution for each fiscal year under this section an amount which, in the aggregate, shall equal 1 percent of the funds available for such purpose for that fiscal year. Such funds shall be used, at the discretion of the Director of the Office, to meet emergencies and unforeseen contingencies affecting the education programs funded under this section. Funds reserved under this subsection may only be expended for education services or programs at a schoolsite (as defined in section 5204(c)(2) of the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988). Funds reserved under this subsection shall remain available without fiscal year limitation until expended. However, the aggregate amount available from all fiscal years may not exceed 1 percent of the current year funds. Whenever the Secretary makes funds available under this subsection, the Secretary shall report such action to the appropriate committees of Congress within the annual budget submission.

"(e) Supplemental appropriations enacted to meet increased pay costs attributable to school level personnel shall be distributed under this section.

"(f) In this section 'eligible Indian student' means a student who—

"(1) is a member of or is at least a 1/4 degree Indian blood descendant of a member of an Indian tribe which is eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States through the Bureau of Indian Affairs to Indians because of their status as Indians, and

"(2) resides on or near an Indian reservation or meets the criteria for attendance at a Bureau off-reservation boarding school.

"(g)(1) An eligible Indian student may not be charged tuition for attendance at a Bureau or contract school. A student attending a Bureau school under clause (2)(C) of this subsection may not be charged tuition.

"(2) The Secretary may permit the attendance at a Bureau school of a student who is not an eligible Indian student if—

"(A) the Secretary determines that the student's attendance will not adversely affect the school's program for eligible Indian students because of cost, overcrowding, or violation of standards,

"(B) the school board consents, and

"(C) the student is a dependent of a Bureau, Indian Health Service, or tribal government employee who lives on or near the school site, or

"(D) a tuition is paid for the student that is not more than that charged by the nearest public school district for out-of-district students. The tuition collected is in addition to the school's allocation under this section.

"(3) The school board of a contract school or grant school may permit students who are not eligible Indian students under this subsection to attend its contract school or grant school and any tuition collected for those students is in addition to funding under this section.

"(h)(1) The Secretary shall conduct, through contact or cooperative agreement with an entity having proven expertise in the field of school finance, and after consultation with tribes and national Indian organizations, a study to determine the feasibility and desirability of changing the method of financing for Bureau funded schools from the weighted student unit formula method in effect on the date of enactment of this Act to a school based budget system of financing. The Assistant Secretary shall take such steps as are necessary to immediately implement this provision.

"(2) For the purposes of this study, the term 'school-based budget system' means a system based upon an initial determination, at each school site, of the number of students who shall be served at the site, the needs of those students, the standards which will best meet those needs (including any standards or conditions reflecting local community input and the program developed under this part), the personnel profile necessary to establish such program and the cost (determined on an actual basis) of funding such a program. Such a system would include procedures to aggregate the determinations for each school site to determine the amount needed to fund all Bureau-funded schools, to prepare a budget submission based upon such aggregate and would provide for a mechanism for distributing such sums as may be appropriated based upon the determination at each school site.

"(3) No later than January 20, 1996, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Education and Labor and Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Indian Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate of the United States the study required under this subsection, along with any views or comments of the Secretary on such study.

"(i) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, at the election of the school board made at any time during the fiscal year, a portion equal to no more than 15 percent of the funds allocated with respect to a school under this section for any fiscal year shall remain available to the school for expenditure without fiscal year limitation. The Assistant Secretary shall take steps as may be necessary to implement this provision immediately.

"(j) Tuition for the out-of-State students boarding at the Richfield Dormitory in Richfield, Utah, who attend Sevier County high schools in Richfield, Utah, may be paid from the Indian School Equalization Program funds at a rate not to exceed the amount per Weighted Student Unit for that year for instruction. No additional administrative cost funds will be added to the grant.

"SEC. 6708. ADMINISTRATIVE COST GRANTS.

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall, subject to the availability of appropriated funds, provide grants to each tribe or tribal organization operating a contract or grant school in the amount determined under this section with respect to the tribe or tribal organization for the purpose of paying the administrative and indirect costs incurred in operating contract schools in order to—

"(A) enable tribes and tribal organizations operating such schools, without reducing direct program services to the beneficiaries of the program, to provide all related administrative overhead services and operations necessary to meet the requirements of law and prudent management practice, and

"(B) carry out other necessary support functions which would otherwise be provided by the Secretary or other Federal officers or employees, from resources other than direct program funds, in support of comparable Bureau operated programs.

"(2) Amounts appropriated to fund the grants provided under this section shall be in addition to, and shall not reduce, the amounts appropriated for the program being administered by the contract schools.

"(b)(1) The amount of the grant provided to each tribe or tribal organization under this section for each fiscal year shall be determined by applying the administrative cost percentage rate of the tribe or tribal organization to the aggregate of the Bureau elementary and secondary functions operated by the tribe or tribal organization for which funds are received from or through the Bureau. The administrative cost percentage rate determined under subsection (c) does not apply to other programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization.

"(2) The Secretary shall—

"(A) reduce the amount of the grant determined under paragraph (1) to the extent that payments for administrative costs are actually received by an Indian tribe or tribal organization under any Federal education program included in the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization, and

"(B) take such actions as may be necessary to be reimbursed by any other department or agency of the Federal Government for the portion of grants made under this section for the costs of administering any program for Indians that is funded by appropriations made to such other department or agency.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the administrative cost percentage rate for a contract or grant school for a fiscal year is equal to the percentage determined by dividing—

"(1) the sum of—

"(A) the amount equal to—

"(i) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year, multiplied by

"(ii) the minimum base rate, plus

"(B) the amount equal to—

"(i) the standard direct cost base, multiplied by

"(ii) the maximum base rate, by

"(2) the sum of—

"(A) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year, plus

"(B) the standard direct cost base.

The administrative cost percentage rate shall be determined to the $1/100$ of a decimal point.

"(d)(1)(A) Funds received by a tribe or contract or grant school as grants under this section for tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be combined by the tribe or contract school into a single administrative cost account without the necessity of maintaining separate funding source accounting.

"(B) Indirect cost funds for programs at the school which share common administrative services with tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be included in the administrative cost account described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) Funds received as grants under this section with respect to tribal elementary or secondary education programs shall remain available to the contract or grant school without fiscal year limitation and without diminishing the amount of any grants otherwise payable to the school under this section for any fiscal year beginning after the fiscal year for which the grant is provided.

"(3) Funds received as grants under this section for Bureau funded programs operated by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement shall not be taken into consideration for purposes of indirect cost underrecovery and overrecovery determinations by any Federal agency for any other funds, from whatever source derived.

"(4) In applying this section and section 106 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act with respect to an Indian tribe or tribal organization that—

"(A) receives funds under this section for administrative costs incurred in operating a contract school or a school operated under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, and

"(B) operates 1 or more other programs under a contract or grant provided under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, the Secretary shall ensure that the Indian tribe or tribal organization is provided with the full amount of the administrative costs, and of the indirect costs, that are associated with operating the contract school, a school operated under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, and all of such other programs, except that funds appropriated for implementation of this section shall be used only to supply the amount of the grant required to be provided by this section.

"(e) For purposes of this section—

"(1)(A) The term 'administrative cost' means the costs of necessary administrative functions which—

"(i) the tribe or tribal organization incurs as a result of operating a tribal elementary or secondary educational program,

"(ii) are not customarily paid by comparable Bureau operated programs out of direct program funds, and

"(iii) are either—

"(I) normally provided for comparable Bureau programs by Federal officials using resources other than Bureau direct program funds, or

"(II) are otherwise required of tribal self-determination program operators by law or prudent management practice.

"(B) The term 'administrative cost' may include, but is not necessarily limited to—

"(i) contract (or other agreement) administration;

"(ii) executive, policy, and corporate leadership and decisionmaking;

"(iii) program planning, development, and management;

"(iv) fiscal, personnel, property, and procurement management;

"(v) related office services and record keeping; and

"(vi) costs of necessary insurance, auditing, legal, safety and security services.

"(2) The term 'Bureau elementary and secondary functions' means—

"(A) all functions funded at Bureau schools by the Office of Indian Education Programs of the Bureau;

"(B) all programs—

"(i) funds for which are appropriated to other agencies of the Federal Government, and

"(ii) which are administered for the benefit of Indians through Bureau schools; and

"(C) all operation, maintenance, and repair funds for facilities and government quarters used in the operation or support of elementary and secondary education functions for the benefit of Indians, from whatever source derived.

"(3) The term 'tribal elementary or secondary educational programs' means all Bureau elementary and secondary functions, together with any other Bureau programs or portions of programs (excluding funds for social services that are appropriated to agencies other than the Bureau and are expended through the Bureau, funds for major subcontracts, construction, and other major capital expenditures, and unexpended funds carried over from prior years) which share common administrative cost functions, that are operated directly by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement with the Bureau.

"(4)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the direct cost base of a tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year is the aggregate direct cost program funding for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization during—

"(i) the second fiscal year preceding such fiscal year, or

"(ii) if such programs have not been operated by the tribe or tribal organization during the 2 preceding fiscal years, the first fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(B) In the case of Bureau elementary or secondary education functions which have not previously been operated by a tribe or tribal organization under contract or agreement with the Bureau, the direct cost base for the initial year shall be the projected aggregate direct cost program funding for all Bureau elementary and secondary functions to be operated by the tribe or tribal organization during that fiscal year.

"(5) The term 'maximum base rate' means 50 percent.

"(6) The term 'minimum base rate' means 11 percent.

"(7) The term 'standard direct cost base' means $600,000.

"(f)(1) Upon the enactment of the Indian Education Amendments of 1988, the Secretary shall—

"(A) conduct such studies as may be needed to establish an empirical basis for determining relevant factors substantially affecting the required administrative costs of tribal elementary and secondary educational programs, using the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(B) a study to determine—

"(i) a maximum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the smallest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs,

"(ii) a minimum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the largest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs, and

"(iii) a standard direct cost base which is the aggregate direct cost funding level for which the percentage determined under subsection (c) will—

"(I) be equal to the median between the maximum base rate and the minimum base rate, and

"(II) ensure that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs closest to the size of the program.

"(2) The studies required under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) be conducted in full consultation (in accordance with section 1130) with—

"(i) the tribes and tribal organizations that are affected by the application of the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(ii) all national and regional Indian organizations of which such tribes and tribal organizations are typically members;

"(B) be conducted on-site at a representative statistical sample of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs under a contract entered into with a nationally reputable public accounting and business consulting firm;

"(C) take into account the availability of skilled labor, commodities, business and automatic data processing services, related Indian preference and Indian control of education requirements, and any other market factors found substantially to affect the administrative costs and efficiency of each such tribal elementary or secondary educational program studied in order to assure that all required administrative activities can reasonably be delivered in a cost effective manner for each such program, given an administrative cost allowance generated by the values, percentages, or other factors found in the studies to be relevant in such formula;

"(D) identify, and quantify in terms of percentages of direct program costs, any general factors arising from geographic isolation, or numbers of programs administered, independent of program size factors used to compute a base administrative cost percentage in such formula; and

"(E) identify any other incremental cost factors substantially affecting the costs of required administrative cost functions at any of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs studied and determine whether the factors are of general applicability to other such programs, and (if so) how they may effectively be incorporated into such formula.

"(3) In carrying out the studies required under this subsection, the Secretary shall obtain the input of, and afford an opportunity to participate to, the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior.

"(4) Determinations described in paragraph (2)(C) shall be based on what is pragmatically possible to do at each location studied, given prudent management practice, irrespective of whether required administrative services were actually or fully delivered at these sites, or other services were delivered instead, during the period of the study.

"(5) Upon completion of the studies conducted under paragraph (1), but in no case later than October 1, 1989, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the findings of the studies, together with determinations based upon such findings that would affect the definitions of terms used in the formula that is set forth in subsection (c).

"(6) The Secretary shall include in the Bureau's justification for each appropriations request for each fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1989, a projection of the overall costs associated with the formula set forth in subsection (c) for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs which the Secretary expects to be funded in the fiscal year for which the appropriations are sought.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection, the size of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs is determined by the aggregate direct cost program funding level for all Bureau funded programs which share common administrative cost functions.

"(g)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(2) If the total amount of funds necessary to provide grants to tribes and tribal organizations in the amounts determined under subsection (b) for a fiscal year exceeds the amount of funds appropriated to carry out this section for such fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce the amount of each grant determined under subsection (b) for such fiscal year by an amount that bears the same relationship to such excess as the amount of such grant determined under subsection (b) bears to the total of all grants determined under subsection (b) for all tribes and tribal organizations for such fiscal year.

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1989 shall—

"(A) in lieu of being determined under subsection (b), be determined for each tribal elementary or secondary educational program on the same basis that indirect costs were determined for such programs for fiscal year 1988, and

"(B) be subject to the provisions of subsection (d).

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grant provided under this section for fiscal year 1990 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1990 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1988 (or fiscal year 1989 if such program was not operated by the tribe or tribal organization during fiscal year 1988), the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) ⅓ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to ⅓ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received, over

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1991 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1991 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1990, the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) ½ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to ½ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received over,

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).

"(i) The provisions of this section shall also apply to those schools operating under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988.

"SEC. 6709. BUDGET PREPARATION AND SUBMISSION.

"(a) For each fiscal year beginning after October 1, 1994, and ending before October 1, 1998, the Secretary shall enter into an interagency agreement with the Secretary of Education for the purpose of carrying out this section. The Secretary shall take such actions as are necessary to transfer information requested by the Secretary of Education or the entity designated under subsection (b) of this section needed to carry out this section in a timely and accurate fashion.

"(b) The Secretary of Education, through the National Center for Education Statistics, shall prepare and submit to Congress the study set forth in subsection (c) of this section no later than January 20, 1995, and January 20 of each of the next 3 succeeding years. The Secretary of Education shall transmit the report directly and without substantive amendment to the Secretary of the Interior, the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior, and the Committees on Education and Labor and Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Indian Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate of the United States.

"(c)(1) The National Center for Educational Statistics (hereinafter referred to as the 'Center') shall prepare for each of the fiscal years covered under subsection (a) of this section a report on the amount needed to achieve academic and residential programs set forth in this part for Bureau-funded schools funded under section

6707. Such study shall be based on (A) the standards developed and implemented for Bureau-funded schools under section 6701 and 6702 of this part or such other standards as may apply to Bureau-funded contract schools or schools funded under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, (B) the student count and characteristics of such schools, as determined pursuant to the formula developed and implemented pursuant to section 6707 of this part for the preceding academic year, adjusted for any changes in student demographics which the Center may project, (C) the employee statistics with respect to such schools for the preceding fiscal year, and (D) such other factors as the Center may set forth, including but not limited to age or physical condition of the schools and changes in isolation.

"(2) Each study shall include a total projected cost for attaining the standards set forth under paragraph (1), and shall presume compliance with those standards. Such study shall also include a projection of the cost for meeting such standards for each Bureau-funded school. Such study shall also include a report on any shortfall in the amount needed to fund Bureau-funded schools, as determined by the study conducted pursuant to this section and the appropriations amount requested and enacted for the period covered by the study.

"(d)(1) Within 24 months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish within the Office of Indian Education Programs a Division of Budget Analysis (hereinafter referred to as the 'Division'). Such Division shall be under the direct supervision and control of the Director of the Office.

"(2) The Division shall have the capacity to conduct such studies, surveys, or other activities as are necessary to gather demographic information on Bureau-funded schools (current and future) and project the amount necessary to provide Indian students in such schools the educational program set forth in this part.

"(3) The Division shall prepare projections on such amounts, along with such other information as the Director of the Office shall require, for each fiscal year beginning after October 1, 1996. The Director of the Office and the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs shall use such reports when preparing their annual budget submissions.

"SEC. 6710. UNIFORM DIRECT FUNDING AND SUPPORT.

"(a)(1) Within six months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish, by regulation adopted in accordance with section 6719, a system for the direct funding and support of all Bureau-funded schools. Such system shall allot funds, in accordance with section 6707. Amounts appropriated for distribution under this section may be made available under paragraph (2) or under paragraph (3), as provided in the appropriation Act.

"(2)(A) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available pursuant to the allotments made by section 6707, amounts appropriated in an appropriation Act for any fiscal year shall become available for obligation by the affected schools on July 1 of the fiscal year in which they are appropriated without further action by the Secretary, and shall remain available for obligation through the succeeding fiscal year.

"(B) The Secretary shall, on the basis of the amount appropriated in accordance with this paragraph—

"(i) publish, on July 1 preceding the fiscal year for which the funds are appropriated, allotments to each affected school made under section 6707 of 85 percent of such appropriation; and

"(ii) publish, no later than September 30 of such preceding fiscal year, the allotments to be made under section 6707 of the remaining 15 percent of such appropriation, adjusted to reflect actual student attendance.

"(3) Notwithstanding any law or regulation, the supervisor of a Bureau school may expend an aggregate of no more than $35,000 of the amount allotted the school under section 6707 to acquire supplies and equipment for the school without competitive bidding if—

"(A) the cost for any single item purchased does not exceed $10,000;

"(B) the school board approves the procurement;

"(C) the supervisor certifies that the cost is fair and reasonable;

"(D) the documents relating to the procurement executed by the supervisor or other school staff cite this paragraph as authority for the procurement; and

"(E) the transaction is documented in a journal maintained at the school clearly identifying when the transaction occurred, what was acquired and from whom, the prices paid, the quantities acquired, and any other information the supervisor or school board considers relevant.

The Director shall be responsible for determining the application of this paragraph, including the authorization of specific individuals to carry out this authority, and shall be responsible for the provision of guidelines on the use of this authority and adequate training on such guidelines.

"(4) If a sequestration order issued under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 reduces the amount of funds available for allotment under section 6707 for any fiscal year by more than 7 percent of the amount of funds available for allotment under such section during the preceding fiscal year—

"(A) the Secretary may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, use—

"(i) funds appropriated for the operation of any Bureau school that is closed or consolidated, and

"(ii) funds appropriated for any program that has been curtailed at any Bureau school, to fund allotments made under section 6707, and

"(B) the Secretary may waive the application of the provisions of section 6701(h) with respect to the closure or consolidation of a school, or the curtailment of a program at a school, during such fiscal year if the funds described in clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) with respect to such school are used to fund allotments made under section 6707 for such fiscal year.

"(b) In the case of all Bureau schools, allotted funds shall be expended on the basis of local financial plans which shall be prepared by the local school supervisor in active consultation with the local school board for each school, and the local school board for each school shall have the authority to ratify, reject, or amend such financial plan, and expenditures thereunder, and, on its own determination or in response to the supervisor of the school, to revise such financial plan to meet needs not foreseen at the time of preparation of the financial plan. The supervisor shall provide the appropriate union representative of the education employees with copies of proposed draft financial plans and all amendments or modifications thereto, at the same time they are submitted to the local school board. The supervisor of the school may appeal any such action of the local school board to the appropriate education officer of the Bureau agency by filing a written statement describing the action and the reasons the supervisor believes such action should be overturned. A copy of such statement shall be submitted to the local school board and such board shall be afforded an opportunity to respond, in writing, to such appeal. After reviewing such written appeal and response, the appropriate education officer may, for good cause, overturn the action of the local school board. The appropriate education officer shall transmit the determination of such appeal in the form of a written opinion to such board and to such supervisor identifying the reasons for overturning such action.

"(c) Funds for self-determination grants under section 103(a)(2) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act shall not be used for providing technical assistance and training in the field of education by the Bureau unless such services are provided in accordance with a plan, agreed to by the tribe or tribes affected and the Bureau, under which control of education programs is intended to be transferred to such tribe or tribes within a specific period of time negotiated under such agreement. The Secretary may approve applications for funding tribal divisions of education and the development of tribal codes of education from funds appropriated pursuant to section 104(a) of such Act.

"(d) In the exercise of its authority under this section, a local school board may request technical assistance and training from the Secretary, and he shall, to the greatest extent possible, provide such services, and make appropriate provisions in the budget of the Office for such services.

"(e)(1) A financial plan under subsection (b) for a school may include, at the discretion of the local administrator and the school board of such school, a provision for a summer program of academic and support services for students of the school. Any such program may include activities related to the prevention of alcohol and substance abuse. The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs shall provide for the utilization of any such school facility during any summer in which such utilization is requested.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds authorized under the Act of April 16, 1934 (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.) and the Indian Education Act may be used to augment the services provided in each summer program at the option, and under the control, of the tribe or Indian controlled school receiving such funds.

"(3) The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs, acting through the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs, shall provide technical assistance and coordination for any program described in paragraph (1) and shall, to the extent possible, encourage the coordination of such programs with any other summer programs that might benefit Indian youth, regardless of the funding source or administrative entity of any such program.

"(f)(1) From funds allotted to a Bureau school under section 6707, the Secretary shall, if specifically requested by the tribal governing body (within the meaning of section 6701(k)), implement any cooperative agreement entered into between the tribe, the Bureau school board, and the local public school district which meets the requirements of paragraph (2) and involves the school. The tribe, the Bureau school board, and the local public school district shall determine the terms of the agreement. Such agreement may encompass coordination of all or any part of the following:

"(A) Academic program and curriculum, unless the Bureau school is currently accredited by a State or regional accrediting entity and would not continue to be so accredited.

"(B) Support services, including procurement and facilities maintenance.

"(C) Transportation.

"(2) Each agreement entered into pursuant to the authority provided in paragraph (1) shall confer a benefit upon the Bureau school commensurate with the burden assumed, though this requirement shall not be construed so as to require equal expenditures or an exchange of similar services.

"(g) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, where there is agreement on such action between the superintendent and school board of a B.I.A. funded school, the product or result of a project conducted in whole or in major part by a student may be given to that student upon the completion of said project.

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds received by Bureau funded schools under this title shall not be considered Federal funds for purposes of meeting a match requirement in any Federal program.

"SEC. 6711. POLICY FOR INDIAN CONTROL OF INDIAN EDUCATION.

"(a) It shall be the policy of the the Secretary and the Bureau, in carrying out the functions of the Bureau, to facilitate Indian control of Indian affairs in all matters relating to education.

"(b)(1) All actions under this Act shall be done with active consultation with tribes.

"(2) The consultation required under paragraph (1) means a process involving the open discussion and joint deliberation of all options with respect to potential issues or changes between the Bureau and all interested parties. During such discussions and joint deliberations, interested parties (including, but not limited to, tribes and school officials) shall be given an opportunity to present issues including proposals regarding changes in current practices or programs which will be considered for future action by the Bureau. All interested parties shall be given an opportunity to participate and discuss the options presented or to present other alternatives, with the views and concerns of the interested parties given effect unless the Secretary determines, from information educed or presented by the interested parties during 1 or more of the discussions and deliberations, that there is a substantial reason for another course of action. The Secretary shall submit to any Member of Congress, within 18 days of the receipt of a written request by such Member, a written explanation of any decision made by the Secretary which is not consistent with the views of the interested parties.

"SEC. 6712. EDUCATION PERSONNEL.

"(a)(1) Chapter 51, subchapter III of chapter 53, and chapter 63 of title 5, United States Code, relating to leave, pay, and classification, and the sections relating to the appointment, promotion and removal of civil service employees, shall not apply to educators or to education positions (as defined in subsection (n)).

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall take effect 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

"(b) Not later than the effective date of subsection (a)(2), the Secretary shall prescribe regulations to carry out this section. Such regulations shall govern—

"(1) the establishment of education positions,

"(2) the establishment of qualifications for educators,

"(3) the fixing of basic compensation for educators and education positions,

"(4) the appointment of educators,

"(5) the discharge of educators,

"(6) the entitlement of educators to compensation,

"(7) the payment of compensation to educators,

"(8) the conditions of employment of educators,

"(9) the length of the school year applicable to education positions described in subsection (n)(1)(A),

"(10) the leave system for educators, and

"(11) such other matters as may be appropriate.

"(c)(1) In prescribing regulations to govern the qualifications of educators, the Secretary shall require—

"(A)(i) that lists of qualified and interviewed applicants for education positions be maintained in each agency and area office of the Bureau from among individuals who have applied at the agency or area level for an education position or who have applied at the national level and have indicated in such application an interest in working in certain areas or agencies; and

"(ii) that a list of qualified and interviewed applicants for education positions be maintained in the Office from among individuals who have applied at the national level for an education position and who have expressed interest in working in an education position anywhere in the United States;

"(B) that a local school board shall have the authority to waive on a case-by-case basis, any formal education or degree qualifications established by regulation pursuant to subsection (b)(2), in order for a tribal member to be hired in an education position to teach courses on tribal culture and language and that subject to subsection (d)(2)(A), a determination by a school board that such a person be hired shall be followed by the supervisor; and

"(C) that it shall not be a prerequisite to the employment of an individual in an education position at the local level that such individual's name appear on the national list maintained pursuant to subsection (c)(1)(A)(ii) or that such individual has applied at the national level for an education position.

"(2) The Secretary may authorize the temporary employment in an education position of an individual who has not met the certification standards established pursuant to regulations, if the Secretary determines that failure to do so would result in that position remaining vacant.

"(d)(1) In prescribing regulations to govern the appointment of educators, the Secretary shall require—

"(I) at least 5 percent, or

"(II) less than 5 percent and affects the recruitment or retention of employees at the school.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to this title? If not, the Clerk will designate title VII. The text of title VII is as follows:

"TITLE VII—BILINGUAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 7001. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Bilingual Education Act'.

"SEC. 7002. FINDINGS, POLICY, AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) language-minority Americans constitute a large and growing proportion of the Nation's population;

"(2) language-minority Americans speak virtually all world languages plus many that are indigenous to the United States;

"(3) the presence of language-minority Americans is related in part to Federal immigration policies;

"(4) many language-minority Americans are limited in their English proficiency, and many have limited education and income;

"(5) limited-English-proficient children and youth, like all other children and youth, have diverse educational needs and strengths and therefore require access to all educational programs and services;

"(6) the Federal Government has a responsibility for the education of American Indians and a special obligation to Native Alaskans, Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations to redress the effect of past Federal policies;

"(7) institutions of higher education can assist in preparing teachers, administrators and other school personnel to understand and build upon the educational strengths and needs of language-minority and culturally diverse student enrollments;

"(8) it is the purpose of this title to help ensure that limited-English-proficient students master English and develop high levels of academic attainment in content areas;

"(9) quality bilingual education programs enable children and youth to learn English and meet high academic standards including proficiency in more than one language;

"(10) as the world becomes increasingly interdependent and as international communication becomes a daily occurrence in government, business, commerce, and family life, multilingual skills constitute an important national resource which deserves protection and development;

"(11) educational technology has the potential for improving the education of language-minority and limited-English-proficient students and their families, and the Federal Government should foster this development;

"(12) research, development, implementation and dissemination of effective bilingual education methods, practices, and programs for limited-English-proficient children are essential to systemwide school reform that improves education for all children; and

"(13) a recognized means by which a child learns is through the use of the child's native language, cultural heritage, and instructional programs which use and build upon a child's non-English native language and cultural heritage to promote parent and community involvement in education, student self-esteem, proficiency in English, and subject matter achievement.

"(b) POLICY.—The Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States, in order to ensure equal educational opportunity for all children and youth and to promote educational excellence, to assist State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and community-based organizations to build their capacity to establish, implement, and sustain programs of instruction for language minority and limited-English-proficient children and youth.

"(c) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to educate language minority and limited-English-proficient children and youth to meet the same rigorous standards for academic performance expected of all children and youth, including meeting challenging State performance standards in academic areas by developing—

"(1) systemic improvement and reform of educational programs serving language-minority and limited-English-proficient students through the development and implementation of exemplary bilingual education programs and special alternative instruction programs;

"(2) data collection and dissemination, research, materials development, and technical assistance which is focused on school improvement for language-minority and limited-English-proficient students; and

"(3) programs which strengthen and improve the professional training of educational personnel who work with limited-English-proficient and language-minority students.

"SEC. 7003. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title (except part F), there are authorized to be appropriated $215,000,000 for the fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999.

"(b) DISTRIBUTION.—From the sums appropriated under subsection (a) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve at least 25 percent for part C of this title.

"SEC. 7004. DEFINITIONS; REGULATIONS

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) The term 'native language', when used with reference to an individual, means the language normally used by such individuals, or, in the case of a child, the language normally used by the parents of the child.

"(2) The term 'language-minority' means—

"(A) individuals whose native language is other than English;

"(B) individuals who usually speak a language other than English or come from home environments where a language other than English is usually spoken; or

"(C) American Indians, Alaskan Natives, and Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations.

"(3) The term 'limited-English-proficient' means a language-minority person who has difficulty understanding, speaking, reading, or writing the English language at a level appropriate to his or her age and grade and is, thereby, academically disadvantaged in programs conducted exclusively in English.

"(4) The term 'bilingual education' refers to educational programs for limited-English-proficient students which make instructional use of both English and a student's native language. Programs of bilingual education must enable limited-English-proficient students to achieve English proficiency and academic mastery of subject matter content and higher order skills, including critical thinking, so as to meet age-appropriate grade-promotion and graduation standards in concert with national education goals. Bilingual education programs may also develop the native language skills of limited-English-proficient students, or ancestral languages of American Indians, Alaskan Natives, Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations. English proficient students may participate in bilingual education programs if the programs are designed to enable all enrolled students to become proficient in English and a second language.

"(5) The term 'special alternative instructional program' refers to educational programs for limited-English-proficient students which utilize specially designed English language curricula and services but do not use the student's native language for instructional purposes. Special alternative instructional programs must enable limited-English-proficient students to achieve English proficiency and academic mastery of subject matter content and higher order skills, including critical thinking so as to meet age-appropriate grade-promotion and graduation standards in concert with national education goals. Special alternative instructional programs are suitable for schools where the diversity of the limited-English-proficient students' native languages and the small number of students speaking each respective language makes bilingual education impractical and where there is a critical shortage of bilingual education teachers.

"(6) The term 'family education programs' refers to bilingual education or special alternative instructional programs designed to help limited-English-proficient adults and out-of-school youths achieve proficiency in the English language and to provide instruction on how parents and family members can facilitate the educational achievement of their children. When feasible, instructional programs such as the model developed under the Even Start Literacy Programs that promote adult literacy and train parents to support the educational growth of their children shall be developed. Programs shall give preference to participation by parents and immediate family members of children attending school. Family education programs may also provide instruction to facilitate higher education and employment outcomes.

"(7) The term 'institution of higher education' has the meaning given such term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

"(8) The term 'Office' means the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs.

"(9) The term 'community college' has the meaning given such term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 for an institution which provides not less than a 2-year program which is acceptable for full credit toward a bachelor's degree, including institutions receiving assistance under the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978.

"(10) The term 'paraprofessional' means an individual who is employed in preschool or elementary or secondary school under the supervision of a certified or licensed teacher, including individuals employed in bilingual education, special education and migrant education.

"(11) The term 'other programs for persons of limited-English-proficiency' means any programs administered by the Secretary that serve persons of limited-English-proficiency.

"(12) The term 'community-based organization' means a private nonprofit organization or Indian tribe or tribally sanctioned educational authority which is representative of a community or significant segments of a community and which provides educational or related services to individuals in the community. The term 'community-based organization' includes Native Hawaiian organizations (including Native Hawaiian education organizations) as defined in section 4009 of Public Law 100–297).

"(13) The term 'children and youth' means individuals aged 3 through 21.

"(14) The term 'immigrant children and youth' means individuals who—

"(A) are aged 3 through 21;

"(B) were not born in any State; and

"(C) have not been attending 1 or more schools in any 1 or more States for more than 2 full academic years.

"(b) Regulation Rule.—In developing regulations under this title, the Secretary shall consult with State and local educational agencies, organizations representing limited-English-proficient individuals, and organizations representing teachers and other personnel involved in bilingual education.

"(c) Parental Notification.—Parents of children and youth participating in programs assisted under this title shall be informed of—

"(1) a student's level of English proficiency, how it was assessed, the status of a student's academic achievement and the implications of a student's educational strengths and needs for age and grade appropriate academic attainment, promotion, and graduation;

"(2) what programs are available to meet the student's educational strengths and needs and how the programs differ in content and instructional goals, and in the case of a disabled student, how the program meets the objectives of a student's individualized education program;

"(3) the instructional goals of the bilingual education or special alternative instructional program, and how the program will specifically help the limited-English-proficient student acquire English and meet age-appropriate standards for grade-promotion and graduation, including—

"(A) the benefits and nature of the bilingual educational program and of the instructional alternatives; and

"(B) the reasons for the selection of their child as being in need of bilingual education.

"(4)(A) Parents shall also be informed that they have the option of declining enrollment of their children and youth in such programs and shall be given an opportunity to do so if they so choose.

"(B) Local educational agencies are not relieved of any of their obligations under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 because parents choose not to enroll their children in bilingual education programs.

"(5) Parents must receive, in a manner and form understandable to them, including, if necessary and to the extent feasible, in their native language, the information required by this subsection. At a minimum, parents must receive—

"(A) timely information about projects funded under this part; and

"(B) if the parents of participating children so desire, notice of opportunities for regular meetings for the purpose of formulating and responding to recommendations from such parents.

"(6) no action may involve the admission or exclusion of students to or from any federally assisted education program merely on the basis of the surnames or language-minority status of such students.

"SEC. 7005. INDIAN AND ALASKAN NATIVE CHILDREN IN SCHOOLS.

"(a) Eligible Entities.—For the purpose of carrying out programs under this title for individuals served by elementary, secondary, or postsecondary schools operated predominately for Indian or Alaska Native children and youth, an Indian tribe, a tribally sanctioned educational authority, or an elementary or secondary school that is operated or funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be considered to be a local educational agency as such term is used in this title, subject to the following qualifications:

"(2) The term 'tribally sanctioned educational authority' means—

"(A) an assessment of the educational outcomes and needs of Indian children with respect to the purposes of this title in schools operated or funded by the Department of the Interior, including tribes and local educational agencies receiving assistance under the Johnson-O'Malley Act and the Native American Languages Act; and

"(B) an assessment of the extent to which such needs are being met by funds provided to such schools for educational purposes through the Secretary of the Interior.

"(2) The results presented in this report shall be included in the report under section 7041 of this Act.

The State educational agency may submit to the Secretary written comments on the application with respect to how the applications further State education improvement plans including any developed under Goals 2000: Educate America Act (if such plans exist) or title I of this Act. If the State educational agency of a State submits written comments on any application, it must submit written comment on all applications within that same grant category from within that State. The Secretary shall take comments into consideration when funding applications under this part.

"(b) Required Documentation.—Such application shall include documentation that the applicant has the qualified personnel required to develop, administer, and implement the proposed program.

"(c) Contents.—(1) An application for a grant under this part shall contain the following:

“(iii) involves the parents of the children and youth of limited-English-proficiency to be served;

“(iv) ensures accountability in the expected student outcomes; and

“(v) promotes coordination of services for the children and youth of limited-English-proficiency to be served and their families.

“(d) APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS.—An application for a grant under this part may be approved only if the Secretary determines that—

“(1) the program will use qualified personnel, including those personnel who are proficient in the language or languages used for instruction;

“(2) in designing the program for which application is made, the needs of children in nonprofit private elementary and secondary schools have been taken into account through consultation with appropriate private school officials and, consistent with the number of such children enrolled in such schools in the area to be served whose educational needs are of the type and whose language and grade levels are of a similar type that the program is intended to address, after consultation with appropriate private school officials, provision has been made for the participation of such children on a basis comparable to that provided for public school children;

“(3) student evaluation and assessment procedures in the program are valid, reliable, and fair for limited-English-proficient students, and that limited-English-proficient students who are disabled are identified and served in accordance with the requirements of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act;

“(4) Federal funds made available for the project or activity will be used so as to supplement the level of State and local funds that, in the absence of such Federal funds, would have been expended for special programs for children of limited-English-proficient individuals and in no case to supplant such State and local funds, except that nothing in this paragraph shall preclude a local educational agency from using funds under this title for activities carried out under an order of a court of the United States or of any State respecting services to be provided such children, or to carry out a plan approved by the Secretary as adequate under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 with respect to services to be provided such children;

“(5) the assistance provided under the application will contribute toward building the capacity of the applicant to provide a program on a regular basis, similar to that proposed for assistance, which will be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to promise significant improvement in the education of students of limited-English-proficiency, and that the applicant will have the resources and commitment to continue the program when assistance under this title is reduced or no longer available;

“(6) the applicant provides for utilization of the State and national dissemination sources for program design and in dissemination of results and products.

“(e) SPECIAL CONSIDERATION AND PRIORITIES.—

“(1) Students may participate in any program receiving funds under this part for the duration of the program.

“(2) The Secretary shall give priority to applications which provide for the development of bilingual proficiency for all participating students.

“(3) Grants for special alternative instructional programs shall not exceed 25 percent of the funds provided for any type of grant under any section or of total funds provided under this part.

“(4) Notwithstanding paragraph (3), the Secretary may award grants for special alternative instructional programs if an applicant has demonstrated that they cannot develop and implement a bilingual education program for the following reasons:

“(A) Where the diversity of the limited-English-proficient students' native languages and the small number of students speaking each respective language makes bilingual education impractical.

“(B) Where, despite documented convincing efforts, the applicant has not been able to hire instructional personnel who are able to communicate in the students' native language.

“(5) In approving applications under this part, the Secretary shall give consideration to the degree to which the program for which assistance is sought involves the collaborative efforts of institutions of higher education, community-based organizations, the appropriate local and State educational agency, or business.

“(6) The Secretary shall ensure that projects funded under this part address the full needs of school systems of all sizes and geographical areas, including rural schools.

“(7) The Secretary shall give priority to applications providing training for personnel participating in or preparing to participate in the program which will assist them in meeting State and local certification requirements and that, to the extent possible, college or university credit will be awarded for such training.

“SEC. 7107. INTENSIFIED INSTRUCTION.

“In carrying out this part, each grant recipient may intensify instruction for limited-English-proficient students by—

“(1) expanding the educational calendar of the school in which such student is enrolled to include programs before and after school and during the summer months;

“(2) expanding the use of professional and volunteer aids;

“(3) applying technology to the course of instruction; and

“(4) providing intensified instruction through supplementary instruction or activities, including educationally enriching extracurricular activities, during times when school is not routinely in session.

“SEC. 7108. CAPACITY BUILDING.

“Each recipient of a grant under this part shall use its grant in ways that will build its capacity to continue to offer high-quality bilingual and special alternative education programs and services to children and youth of limited-English-proficiency once Federal assistance is reduced or eliminated.

“SEC. 7109. SUBGRANTS.

“A local educational agency that receives a grant under this part may, with the approval of the Secretary, make a subgrant to, or enter into a contract with, an institution of higher education, a non-profit organization, or a consortium of such entities to carry out an approved program, including a program to serve out-of-school youth.

“SEC. 7110. GEOGRAPHIC DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.

“SEC. 7111. PROGRAMS IN PUERTO RICO.

“Programs authorized under this title in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico may, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, include programs of instruction, teacher training, curriculum development, evaluation, and testing designed for children and youth of limited-Spanish proficiency.

“SEC. 7112. EVALUATIONS.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to this title?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROTH

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROTH: Beginning on page 618, strike line 1 and all that follows through page 688, line 10.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, we Americans are people from every corner of the globe, every cultural, every religious, every linguistic, every ethnic background. We are the most diverse nation in the world. Yet we are one Nation, one people.

Why? One of the main reasons is because we have a wonderful bond, a wonderful common glue, a commonality called the English language.

From the very beginning of our government, Mr. Chairman, from 1789 to 1968, 179 years, we did not have bilingual education as a governmental policy. Then in the 1960's, the period of the Great Society, the concept of bilingual education was established.

Now for 25 years this issue has not been debated, and that is one of the reasons, one of the main purposes, for my amendment. Bilingual education is a failure. It costs the taxpayer, Federal, State, and local government, billions of dollars. It pits one group against another, and sets up now and in the future, linguistic ghettos, and it sets up entire subcultures. This is not what we want in America because we realize what they will mean to America's future. It only helps bilingualism, only helps professional activists and politicians who profit from this policy.

Listen to Everett Alvarez, Jr., best-selling author and a decorated Vietnam war hero:

> Like my parents before me, and with even more justification than they had, I believe that education is the key to a successful and happy life in an open society. With that in mind, I oppose the movement to make Spanish (or any other foreign tongue) a second coequal language in American schools. This is a hindrance, rather than a help to the young people who will eventually have to make their way in an English speaking society.

Listen, as well, to Jose Fabila, a Sacramento businessman who testified at the English language task force hearings we held in August of last year:

> English is the language of opportunity for everybody in this country. Bilingual education has been created for political purposes. Immigrants have not even asked for these services. Government bureaucrats fight for bilingual programs because they get money and status from them. It is in this way that the government divides us on the basis of language and national origin. It is a grave danger to all of us.

And it was best said by Ernesto Ortiz, a foreman on a south Texas ranch who put it this way:

> My children learn Spanish in school so they can grow up to be busboys and waiters. I teach them English at home so they can grow up to be doctors and lawyers.

Arthur Schlesinger, in his fine little book, The Disuniting of America, and many people are talking about this particular issue, where America is headed, but he says, and I quote in just a sentence:

> And in a world savagely rent, and we see that, by ethnic and racial antagonisms it is all the more essential that the United States continue as an example of how a highly differentiated society holds itself together.

And in another place he says:

> Bilingualism is an elitist, not a popular, movement. Institutionalized bilingualism remains another source of fragmentation of America, another threat to the dream of one people.

Mr. Chairman, people who have given this a good deal of thought realize that, if we are going to remain one Nation, one people, then we have to have a commonality that brings all of our cultures together. It is great for us to have different cultures and for people to speak any language they want in their home, to cherish their culture, but we have to have a commonality, a common link that brings all us together as Americans, and that is the English language. Not only are immigrants taught in bilingual education from outside of our country coming in, but also people who were born here are now in bilingual education.

Charles Pacheco, and ex-marine and a native-born American, has this story to tell: His daughter was placed into a bilingual education program, not because she didn't speak English, but because her last name was Hispanic in origin. Even after Mr. Pacheco informed the school that no one in his home spoke Spanish, his daughter remained trapped in that bilingual education class.

My position is best stated by a Chicago Tribune editorial:

> Bilingual education has ossified into practices that foster and prolong ethnic segregation and isolation. It robs children of their best chance to become full participants in American life. And it contributes to the fragmenting of this nation into competing ethnic splinters, increasingly conscious and defensive of our differences instead of our unity.

We are all Americans. Let us rise above special interests. Let us rise above the education lobby. Let us rise above group mentality. This is our country, our entire country. It belongs to all of us.

Let us, therefore, proceed and vote on this amendment so that we can keep one Nation, one people, indivisible.

Joseph Califano, who was President Carter's Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare from 1979 was with President Johnson when this program was initiated in 1968.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ROTH was allowed to proceed for 30 additional seconds.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, here is what he said:

> Of most serious concern to me was that the HEW bilingual education program had become captive of professional Hispanic and other ethnic groups with their understandable emotional, but often exaggerated, political rhetoric and biculturalism.

☐ 1450

Joseph Califano was there when this was started, and he has now said that it is time for us to rethink this program because it does not serve our immigrant children of America.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's closing remarks are the most telling. He says that Joseph Califano was with the Johnson administration when they invented bilingual. That is just another illustration that the gentleman does not know what he is talking about. Bilingual education was not invented by or created by the Congress or by any State legislature. The requirement placed upon the States to provide bilingual education resulted from a Supreme Court decision, Lau versus Nichols, and the remedies developed by U.S. Commissioner of Education Jewell Bell to assist States in meeting the spirit of that decision.

The Lau decision involved Chinese children from San Francisco who were dispersed into schools where there were no Chinese speaking teachers. There was a lawsuit brought on behalf of some of those students. The Supreme Court held that if the children could not be communicated with by the teacher, they could not get a free public education.

They used the same reasons they have used in the past to force schools to buy school books for children and to force schools to buy slates for children, and pencils and papers.

If we adopt the gentleman's amendment, we abolish the help that the Federal Government gives to States and localities to provide the remedies developed to meet this Supreme Court decision. We do not impose a mandate. We came along and said if States are going to have to ensure a meaningful education to students who do not understand English, we had better give them some help. The gentleman's amendment would stop the help we have been giving them for 20 years to meet this court-imposed mandate.

The Bilingual Education Act is the major Federal assistance specifically designed to help State and local agencies meet the needs of the limited English-proficient students. Schools are at the present time facing the largest influx of immigrants since the early 1990's. Limited English-proficient students are the fastest growing segment of our school population.

California experienced a threshold increase in the limited English-speaking proficient population during the past decade, with 1 million students attending California's schools. In New Mexico, 2 of every 10 students is limited English-proficient. In Texas, 1 of every 10 students is limited English-proficient. During the 1980's the population of limited English-proficient children coming to the schools increased 38 percent in Montana, 46 percent in Oklahoma, 39 percent in South Dakota, 36 percent in North Dakota, and 41 percent in Delaware. We can go all across the country and track these numbers and we will see it.

The Federal Government which controls immigration policy has a responsibility to the public schools by offsetting the cost of their need of additional resources they are mandated to spend because the courts have said that they will have to have those programs. If we would adopt the gentleman's amendment, we would not stop one bilingual program in this country. What we would do is force our States or our local school districts at the point of a gun held by the court system to come up with money from some other source, and this year we are going to have to replace $156 million with local tax money. If we want to dump this burden into the local taxpayer and take it out of our regular school programs, we can vote for the Roth amendment. If Members think they are getting a cheap shot at people who do not speak English very well or little children who live in a household where English is not spoken, they can take the cheap shot.

Perhaps Members may, like the gentleman from Wisconsin, think that would be a good political move. I think it is just plain stupid.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to vote against the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I submit the following material following my remarks:

OPPOSE THE ROTH AMENDMENT TO REPEAL BILINGUAL EDUCATION

The Bilingual Education Act makes clear that parents choose, are not required, to enroll their child in a bilingual program. Bilingual Education offers choice.

Schools that are able to offer two-way bilingual programs, are finding that their limited-English-proficient students acquire English faster and in greater depth than limited-English-proficient students in the same school who are placed in English immersion programs.

The amendment is opposed by the Dept. of Education, OMB and diverse organizations, including: American Assn. of School Administrators, National Conference of State Legislatures, U.S. Catholic Conference, National School Boards Assn., National Parent Teacher Association, National Assn. of State Boards of Education, Nat'l Assn. of Elementary School Principals and others.

This amendment would discourage the use of bilingual education programs, in favor of English immersion programs. Under the Committee's bi-partisan bill, English immersion programs are supported and so are bilingual education programs. The bill approved by the Committee helps schools offer "choice" to their students for the instructional approaches which work best in each individual situation.

Limited English proficient children would be discouraged from reaching high academic standards in their native languages while acquiring English. This provision eviscerates a major premise of the bill which is to hold all students to high academic standards. Almost all the research looking at long-term results over at least four years has found that the greater the amount of instructional support in one's native language, combined with balanced support in English, the higher they are able to achieve academically in English in the succeeding academic years. In Arlington County Virginia, a two-way bilingual education program begun 8 years ago in one elementary school has been so successful that (1) a second program was begun in an elementary school close by to meet the large demand, (2) a junior high school program was implemented in the same area in response teacher and parent desire for a continuation of the program, and (3) a high school two-way bilingual program is about to be offered in that same area.

The Committee bill is carefully crafted to provide a balance of support for bilingual education programs and for special alternative instructional programs (those using English). The amendment would alter this balance which ensures that schools with students of diverse language backgrounds and schools without access to proficient bilingual education teachers are given full consideration for program funds.

Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. Chairman, lastly, let me read from a letter from Secretary Riley who opposes this amendment.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION,
Washington, DC, March 21, 1994.

DEAR MEMBER OF CONGRESS: I am writing in strong opposition to the Roth amendments which may be offered to H.R. 6, the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. These amendments to Title VII would prohibit the implementation of bilingual education, or, alternatively, eliminate all Federal support for Title VII services to limited-English-proficient children.

Since its inception some 25 years ago, Title VII has been the primary Federal education assistance program for states and local schools in their educational equity pursuits in behalf of limited-English-proficient students. Elimination of this program would place further burden on state and local education agencies as they implement legally mandated requirements to educate limited-English-proficient students (under the Supreme Court's Lau v. Nichols decision) while the number of these students increases to record proportions.

Moreover, research over the last decade, including the Education Department's independent evaluations of bilingual education programs, indicates clearly that bilingual education strategies can be effective in the development of English language competencies and related academic content achievement.

I hope you will vote against these amendments.

Yours sincerely,
RICHARD W. RILEY,
Secretary.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, While Mr. ROTH, and I share many similar views, such as the importance of the English language, I must rise today in opposition to the Roth amendments to H.R. 6 which would restrict or eliminate federally supported bilingual education programs.

As my colleagues may know, I am the persistent author of several pieces of legislation regarding the English language. One bill would declare English to be the official language of our Federal Government, another would offer tax credits to employers who offer English language training and instruction to the employees, and another would prohibit citizenship ceremonies in a language other than English.

I have introduced and strongly support these bills because I know it is the bond of language that has blended our many cultures to form a heritage that is uniquely American. The movement for official English is inclusive, and it seeks to extend the American Dream to all Americans, regardless of race, religion, national origin, or language ability.

In order to achieve nationwide communication in English, bilingual education must continue. Children from all over the world face a difficult transition from their native language into English fluency when they enter American schools. Bilingual education is based on the idea that the transition can be eased when children can be taught—temporarily—in the language they understand.

I do share the concerns of Mr. ROTH that some bilingual education programs may be losing sight of the original goal of bilingual education. The goal of bilingual education was and is to help children become fluent in English as quickly as possible. For example, while I recognize that there is a transition period whereby children need time to learn English, I do not agree with some educators and policymakers about the length of the transition period—which some believe should last as long as 8 years. Bilingual education was enacted because Congress wants limited English proficient students to quickly learn English and move on.

I think that—as with many Government programs—bilingual education could certainly stand changing and updating. However, these improvements will not take place if local schools lose Federal funds or if all references to bilingual education are eliminated. Instead, we need to work to ensure that local schools have the flexibility to use these funds for programs they believe work best. Bilingual education programs which use innovative methods to move students along more quickly and thus integrate them with their peers sooner should be encouraged, rewarded, and highlighted for others to replicate.

Knowledge of English is a key to opportunity in America. Those who don't speak English have only a limited number of doors available to them. In 1990, one in seven children lived in a home where a language other than English was spoken. For these children, a bilingual education class which quickly and effectively leads to fluency in English is crucial to their futures.

For these reasons, I cannot support the Roth amendments and urge their defeat. But I want to encourage my colleagues to support the underlying issue for these amendments, official English and the Language of Government Act. Legislating a common language makes common sense. By designating English as the official language of the Federal Government, we will create a channel of communication common to all the diverse peoples of this great Nation of ours. Bilingual education and official English can work together to bring our Nation together.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the gentleman's amendment. Bilingual education, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], our chairman, is the only Federal assistance program designed to help State and the school districts to meet the needs of students with limited English proficiency.

I would suggest the gentleman read the bilingual section of this 902-page bill, where it gives the purpose of bilingual education. I helped write this purpose of bilingual education in a bipartisan way with people like Steve Bartlett and JOHN MCCAIN, when he was a Member of the House.

It is the purpose, the bill reads, of this title, to help ensure that limited English proficient students master English and develop high levels of academic attainment in content areas.

That is the purpose of bilingual education. With JOHN MCCAIN, and Steve Bartlett, when we worked on this bill over the last three authorizations, we allowed 25 percent of the money to be used for alternative methods of helping these students with limited English proficiency. And with Mr. GOODLING's amendment in committee, we allow waivers to go beyond that 25 percent.

We recognize that it would be a terrible social failure, a terrible educational failure, for a student to finish school not being proficient in English. Bilingual education, as written in this bill, recognizes that. But we wanted to make sure that those students do not fall behind in promotion or in graduation because of their lack of English proficiency. When they are in the third grade, we want them to become English proficient, but at the same time, when they are learning the other subjects, to use their native language when necessary, to make sure they do not fall behind their peers in that class.

Again, I will read to the gentleman. The purpose of this title is to ensure that limited English proficient students master English. We want them to do that. We do not want them to fall behind their peers in their other subjects.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendments offered by Representative ROTH which would restrict or eliminate federally funded bilingual education programs.

One of the amendments would deny thousands of disadvantaged students of the essential services they need to succeed educationally. The other amendment would eliminate badly needed funding to schools which are legally required to provide special services to students with limited English proficiency.

Bilingual programs aid students who do not speak English to develop competency in English, and they aim to ensure that these students maintain good academic progress in other academic areas. Eliminating the bilingual programs would deprive bilingual children of an essential part of their education. The consequences to this are devastating—not only to these children and their families, but to the country as a whole, when these children reach adulthood.

I learned English through a bilingual program when I came to this country as a child and therefore, I witnessed firsthand the invaluable service this program provides. As a certified teacher, I have seen how students in bilingual programs succeed in school, and tackle challenging situations.

Bilingual programs address the different needs experienced by students who are learning a second language. These needs are the ability to communicate in English, the type of English needed to socially interact, and the type of English needed to successfully participate in the curriculum. The bilingual program offers techniques that account for different linguistic and cultural habits as well as speeding the process of language learning by reinforcing both languages.

Removing these programs means that we are disregarding the high percentage of students whose first language is not English. A bilingual program is imperative if we are to make productive citizens out of all our students. That is why I oppose Mr. ROTH'S amendments and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

When I came to the United States at age 7, I did not know how to speak one word in English. The classroom was totally bewildering to me, because I did not understand anything the teacher was saying. But, because the Dade County Public School System was, and continues to be, a vanguard in the bilingual educational movement, programs were already being implemented to help refugee children—thousands of them—just like me.

I went to Southside, Riverside, and Shenandoah Elementary Schools in Miami and all had excellent bilingual programs.

In a few years, all of us Cuban refugees were able to be mainstreamed into an English-only classroom.

Could I have survived without a bilingual program? No, I doubt it. Bilingual programs helped me understand the subject matter and also have the self-confidence I needed to excel in school. There are more little Ileana's out there. Help them learn. Support bilingual education. Defeat the Roth amendments.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise against the amendment, but first let me add a little bit of history that may not be known to most of us here.

Where I live in Texas, my hometown of Mission, TX, the first nonoriginal language spoken there was Spanish, when the Spaniards first came. Later they wove in with what is now Mexico, but the language still remained Spanish. Later they came from the northeast, other white Europeans, but not Spanish speaking, to that area of Texas.

When I was in the State legislature, there was a gentleman named Felix Tijerina from Houston, who had grown up near Houston, and the problem there then was every household was Spanish speaking. Therefore when a child went to the first grade, he failed, except for a very bright one. The second grade, he failed. The third grade he failed, because there was no involvement at all from the Spanish community. All of the teachers were English-speaking teachers.

Felix Tijerina then moved as a young child to Houston, working in a restaurant washing dishes. Eventually he moved into an assistant cook position. He eventually became the cook. Eventually he became the manager. Eventually he bought the restaurant, which is the American dream. But he had not yet mastered English. He had only a third grade education. But he had a heart as big as this Chamber, and he did not want the youngsters to go through in this day and age what he had gone through. So he went and inquired, what is the problem? They do not know enough basic words of English to successfully finish the first grade.

Therefore, with his own funds, he went and got one of his teachers, and they looked about how to remedy this. The State would not touch it. Therefore, this teacher told him that you needed 400 basic words of English not to remain in the first grade beyond the 1 year. So he funded several seniors from the high school in the summer prior to the first grade for the children in that neighborhood where he had grown up, and paid them a stipend to teach the children the basic 400 words of English.

That little school was then called the Little School of the Four Hundred. It was sponsored by the League of United Latin American Citizens and Felix Tigerina through their own resources. Eventually it caught the eye of then Governor Price Daniels, and three Members of the Legislature, Malcolm McGregor of El Paso, Oscar Laurel of Laredo, and myself sponsored what we called the preschool English legislation. And it passed the House, and it passed the Senate. It was signed by Governor Daniels at the time.

This is what we are arguing here basically in ignorance. Why did we get there? Why did it happen? The only thing that we can do now is to fund what the courts ordered. During elections you hear about unfunded mandates.

That was the problem. Eventually, it became such a problem that the Federal courts moved into it. And then we legislated. I was here.

The problem became what we are now suffering, that is, it became a Spanish issue in the areas where Spanish was spoken, little knowing that it was French in another area and German in another area and Polish in another area and Slovak in another area.

But now we are bashing someone who looks Oriental or if they look like me. Someone recently said, "We need more European-sounding names around here." Is DE LA GARZA a European-enough name for my colleagues? Or does it have to be Winthrop or Walsh? That is what the argument is all about. It is not about the funding. It is that we are down on anyone that does not look American, whatever the heck that is. I guess it is one that looks like you.

And this is the area that we are legislating mostly in ignorance, with some degree of emotion of a negative kind. I urge my colleagues not to discuss this type of amendment. We need to educate our children. We need to stop crime in the streets. We need to get more housing. We need to build more roads.

We should not be wasting our time on if someone is speaking English or Spanish, does he look Oriental or does he look Hispanic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I was asked recently by a person, "Why don't you just put American where it says nationality?" I said, "Fine with me, but what do we do about Central America? What do we do about South America?"

He said, "Well, I hadn't thought about that. I thought Americans was us."

A friend of mine who is a singer from Mexico was in Canada not too long ago. And at the end of his program, he sang "God Bless America." A Canadian walked up to him and said, "Why are you singing that here?" He said, "Is not Canada a part of North America? Are we not Americans all from Chile to Canada? Should we say this language, yes, that language, no?"

I say, let us worry about the issues of the day and not emotional outbursts of a negative nature. That is why I oppose this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. CUNNINGHAM], a member of the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, is it possible to have some support statements made on the floor, since most have been negative?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is to give priority to members of the committee and does not confer recognition by stated position on the issue. The gentleman will be recognized in due course.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH], my good friend, probably 99 percent of the time on this House floor I would be in support of the gentleman, but as a member of the committee, I must oppose this amendment. And if Members look at the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN], take a look at a young woman that came to this country from Cuba and spoke no English. She rose to be a Member of the U.S. Congress.

I would ask my colleagues to take a look at what her opportunities would have been if she would have gone through junior high school or even high school and not spoken or not been able to learn the English language.

That happens in many cases in the State of California. I support English as a first language for this country. If I were going to move, and I am sure, Mr. Chairman, if Members would take their children to Russia, I would want my children to learn Russian better than they knew English. I would want them to know English as well from their home country, but I would want them to know Russian because they would have to operate not only in the school system but in the business place with that language. And to be successful, it would be mandatory.

I would hope that those Russian schools would support my children in learning the language in the mother-tongue of that country.

I take a look at the Paul Ecke School in my own district, which has a lot of limited-English-proficient children. It is a flower-picking area. I am talking about legal children, legal residents of this country. The illegals, it is a totally different issue.

But there are many children, 5 years old, 6 years old, 7 years old. I have sat in those classrooms and watched the teachers teach these children.

Again, visualize a 5-year-old learning English, and then take that same child to when they are in the fifth or sixth grade and not proficient in the English language. What kind of future, where we have a large portion of children dropping out of school, what happens to them? They end up selling crack on the street corner or getting involved in low-income jobs and not having much of a future or even on welfare.

So the investment that we make in these children early on, getting them prepared to live and work in this country and speak the language helps them and it helps us.

This is not an issue of race or what a person looks like. It is an issue of what a person can learn, what a person can do to help themselves so that we as the Government do not have to help them when they are adults.

I see a time in the future in the country, like France, where they have actually modems that go into the homes. When I walk precincts in my district, I go into homes where none of the parents speak English. They are legal citizens of this country, but they are on welfare or, in many cases, low-income jobs. I would like to see, through the information highway someday, where we reach out into the homes with these people to teach them English so that they can take part in the workplace and strengthen the economy and get off the Government dole.

Mr. Chairman, in this case I go against the amendment of my good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH]. In the name of the children and as a good investment, vote against this amendment.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

My colleagues are looking at someone who has not always been a bilingual supporter. I think it was not until more recent years that I began to understand the gravity of young people entering into our schools speaking a different language and not being able to comprehend the studies and not being able to do the studies and falling behind and falling further and further behind all the time.

Understand this, there are a lot of myths surrounding bilingual education, and they are promoted generally by somebody who has a certain vested interest. I am not suggesting my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH] has a vested interest. He is genuinely sincere in what he is trying to do here. He is down the hall from me. I see him all the time. On occasion we talk about this.

He talks to me about the Hispanics who sign letters and make statements, antibilingual education. That is nothing new to me.

I remember not too long ago when this same kind of debate was taking place in California, that there was an editorial or there were letters to the editor on the issue in the Times, the local paper there. And if Members looked at the letters to the editor, those that were against bilingual education were signed by Hispanics. Those that were pro-bilingual education were not signed by Hispanics. Non-Hispanics signed those letters. But almost all of those that signed the letters in support of bilingual education were professionals where the other people were just laypeople and were emotional about it.

There are several reasons. I can understand, and if Members look at the history of Hispanics in the United States and understand that they are fiercely loyal to this country, fiercely patriotic, and still they are trying to allow themselves the enjoyment of their culture and appreciation of their culture and pride of their culture. For too many years they were denied that. For too many years they were denied that.

And so we can understand why some Hispanics, wanting to be that proud American, want to be called just an American not a Mexican-American. I had a friend who once told me, he said, "I am sick and tired of being called a Mexican-American. My parents were born in this country. Their parents before them were born in this country, and their parents before this country was a country were born here. And yet I am still called a Mexican-American."

Yet, if some blond, blue-eyed individual got off the boat one generation ago, he is now called an American. So we can understand why there is a fierce, determined need to be called American.

If we look at our history in wars, in every major war Hispanics have been the most decorated heroes of those wars, even the ones they do not call a war. If we look at World War II, the Hispanic community as an ethnic group won more Congressional Medals of Honor than any other group, fiercely proud of being American, fiercely proud of their ability to speak the English language.

Let me tell the Members, if we visit the reunions of the Congressional Medal of Honor winners we will find many of them still speak English with a broken accent, deprived of proper education at a very young age.

I want to associate my remarks with those of the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN] who is an immigrant from Cuba who came to this country. She sits here in Congress a proud American, proud of her ability to speak Spanish, which she learned without the benefit of bilingual education.

Let me tell the Members a few of the myths about bilingual education and where it does do some good. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] and others have spoken about the need for bilingual education because it is the Head Start for Hispanics. It is the Head Start for Hispanics.

We know what Head Start does for our young people. It gives them the ability and a greater chance of finishing school, of being more likely to graduate and go on to higher education. It gives them the advantage of less likelihood of being in criminal activities or being members of gangs. It does all of these things.

Bilingual education is the Head Start for Hispanics. I have two daughters-in-law, one born in Ecuador and one born in the United States of America. The one born in the United States of America is a first generation American. The one born in Ecuador is, naturally, an immigrant.

My daughter-in-law has taught her three children Spanish, and they speak Spanish fluently without any accent of English, and they speak English without any accent of Spanish. As a result, they have done very well in school, and have been promoted several grades, to the point that she is now holding them back because they will leave their age group too far from their age group.

My other daughter-in-law, who was born in this country, first generation American, is a bilingual education teacher in the Montebello School District, and yet she will not teach her children Spanish until they learn English. Should this not this tell us something?

I did not speak Spanish to begin with, I spoke English to begin with, and I as an adult had to learn Spanish in order that I could have the same kind of pride in my culture and my background as does the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN], as does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SERRANO], and many other Members of the Hispanic Caucus here. We are just as good Americans as anyone else.

Bilingual education is necessary for our children to get a head start. Without it, they do not learn the labels that they need to know and make the translations they need to know from Spanish to English. It benefits us, it benefits me, it benefits all of us that there is bilingual education.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I know there has been a lot of heat and implications of racism in this debate. I very much support legal immigration in this country of all races. This is not just an issue of dealing with Latin American immigrants who come to the United States and become citizens and a great part of this Nation. It speaks to all people who wish to immigrate to this area.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote Dr. Daniel J. Boorstin. He is a Pulitzer Prize historian, former Librarian of Congress, and has received the highest intellectual honors the United States Government can bestow. He has two statements.

First, "The menace to America today is in the emphasis of what separates us, rather than what brings us together, the separation of race, of religious dogma, of religious practice, of origin, and of language."

He goes on to say, "Bilingual teaching tends to restrict opportunities for the very people who need the opportunity to enter the mainstream of American life."

Mr. Chairman, I know there are a lot of sincere feelings expressed on this floor by people who feel that continuing to spend the over $1 billion that we spend in this country on programs to teach non-English speaking and non-English-proficient students in their native languages, but I would remind the Members that Dr. Boorstin, whom we would not classify as a racist, we would not classify as someone with a hidden agenda, we would classify him as one of the leading educators and one of the great minds of this country, says, and I repeat the quote, "Bilingual teaching tends to restrict opportunities for the very people who need the opportunity to enter the mainstream of American life."

Of course, I can cite additional facts. In 1985, a poll in Dade County, FL, revealed that 98 percent of Dade County Hispanic parents agreed that it was essential for their children to speak and write English perfectly. Thomas Sowell, in his book "Inside American Education," cited numerous surveys proving that the great Majority of Hispanic parents, more than three-quarters of Mexican-American parents and more than 80 percent of Cuban-American parents, are opposed to the teaching of Spanish in the schools at the expense of English for their children.

Ninety-seven percent of all Americans support making English the official language, as was proved by the October, 1993 USA Weekend poll.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. ROTH) to title 7 of H.R. 6. I think the overwhelming evidence is that we are spending $1 billion that could be better spent in improving education in the communities. As Dr. Boorstin said, we are removing opportunities, we are hurting the very people that we talk about helping. That is why I support this amendment.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, one of the problems with this amendment, the Roth amendment, is that it is an amendment that speaks to the language issue during an education debate, and while the language issue may, for some people, be a legitimate issue, it certainly does not belong in this kind of a debate, because this debate should be about education.

The fact of life is that if we take it as an education issue, bilingual education has been proven to help. The National Academy of Sciences found in 1992, in its assessment of two major evaluations, that bilingual education was helping and not hindering young people so they could acquire English as their main language.

Much has been said here today about parents somehow desiring their children not to speak English. We cannot really believe that. The fact of life is that most polls taken of parents newly arrived from any community, indicates that parents want for their children as quickly as possible to learn to speak English.

Bilingual education is a tool to allow people to learn subject matter while at the same time they learn to speak English. I can tell the Members from personal experience the difficulty of being placed in a mainstream program without knowledge of the language.

When I arrived in New York from Puerto Rico, I arrived as a migrant, not as an immigrant, speaking Spanish only. I recall how difficult it was for myself and for that group of youngsters who were in that classroom, because we had the language problem; one, we were not allowed to participate in any regular classroom work, so it was something like the fifth grade before most of us knew who George Washington was and what he had accomplished, when in fact we could have been told in Spanish who Jorge Washington was in the second grade and what he had accomplished.

Also, I recall the difficulty, the traumatic difficulty, of having a neighbor of mine who came from a family and at that time was told that you did not make one move in the classroom without the teacher's permission, so he could not communicate with the teacher in Spanish or in English the fact that he had to leave the room, and he wet his pants, and until the time he was in high school, his records indicated that because of his behavior in the second and third grade, there was something terribly wrong with this guy, and there in fact was nothing wrong, only the fact that they could not communicate in the same language.

Those are facts of life, how people have to deal with this particular problem. The other thing that is interesting about this debate is that it strikes bilingual education programs, without making any provisions for the fact that, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] said, these programs would still continue to be part of every State's responsibility.

For instance, California would have to come up with $59 million if this amendment was approved. New York would have to come up with $26 million, Texas with $12, the State of Washington with $3, Alaska almost $1.2, and on and on to replace these programs at the local level, replace the Federal funding, which is going to cost a lot to these local governments.

The real issue in this debate is the issue of whether or not we as Americans are going to continue to be fearful of languages other than English.

I must tell my colleagues this part of the debate is the part I find the most difficult to understand.

Why is it that we continuously get on the floor of this House and talk about how we must compete with other people throughout the world, and yet when our businessmen meet those other business people they have to speak in English, because we have never learned their language. The Japanese businessmen speak English. Is it because they recognize English as the most important language in the world? Is it because they are fearful of us? Is it because they think it is such an easy language to speak? Or is it perhaps that a very intelligent business community has decided that it is good business to learn languages other than their own? The Germans, the French all speak other languages.

I recall in the 1960's or 1970's in the era of the so-called spaghetti westerns, if Members will recall we had French actors, we had Italian actors, we had Spanish actors who dubbed their movies in three or four different languages. Yet, when Clint Eastwood or Charles Bronson or any of our other actors did not speak another language, we realized that this horrible dubbing did not sound anything like Clint Eastwood or Charles Bronson.

Let us not be dubbed in other languages. Let us learn the other languages of the world.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH], of which he knows, and I am of the belief that this is a legitimate debate, because I have at times been asked whether or not it is possible that bilingual education, by continuing teaching in the classroom in a native language, that the students may be retarded in their learning of English. I have been asked that question, whether they may be retarded in their learning of English. I have studied this issue at some length and in some depth, visiting a number of bilingual education programs and have learned that, on the contrary, bilingual education increases the rapidity, increases the speed with which students become totally fluent in the English language, and at the same time, at the same time it permits them not to sink while they are learning. In other words, to stay afloat in the substantive areas that they are taught in the language of the country of their origin. That is an important issue to focus in on.

I realize the decibels of emotion are high on this issue. It is natural. There is much passion with regard to this issue. So I think it is important to see where the evidence leads us with regard to what is actually occurring in the classroom.

I recently had an opportunity to visit the Miami Springs Middle School in my district. The kids that are in the bilingual education program are in that program again in the substantive areas like math, like science, and like history in the numerous languages of their countries of origin for a relatively short period of time. Actually during the day it is just a few hours. And it is a maximum of 3 years during their education that these students are in these substantive areas to stay afloat in those substantive areas while a great majority, the overwhelming amount of time that they spend each day in school is immersed in English. That fact is important to realize. The kids in bilingual education spend the overwhelming majority of their day immersed in the English language to become as proficient as possible and to be able to be in an English curriculum, in a totally English curriculum as soon as possible.

That is the goal, and actually that goal is achieved time and time again all throughout the country where bilingual education programs are maintained. It is very rare to see a pupil that is all 3 years in a bilingual education program. Within 1 year or a year and a half, they are usually immersed fully, and their curriculum is totally in English. So it is a program that works. It is a program that I understand evokes emotion, but I think it is important for us to keep the decibels as low as possible on the emotional scale and on the passion scale, and that we focus in on the education issue.

It works. It is cost-effective. The States fund these programs for the greatest majority of what they require. What we do is really more than anything else encourage States to have that option and school boards to offer the option of those programs.

So I think it is important that we make a statement today and defeat the amendment of my good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Roth amendment. I would like to briefly talk about the three reasons, and then like a lot of other Members on the floor relate personal experiences with bilingual education and the need for bilingual education.

First, the Roth amendment forces the States to pay the total cost, and whether in California, New York, or Texas, we are already providing substantial local and State funding for bilingual, because it does work. And this would just require those local States to pay even more money.

This is not a funding item. This is a grant formula. If the city of Houston or the Houston School District does not receive this grant, then they have to pay for it locally. This is not something that is automatically sent from Washington to say OK, Houston, independent school district, or L.A. Consolidated, you have to provide it. They competitively seek these grants to help provide this funding for the students.

We need to recognize that bilingual is not just teaching someone in their native language. It is also teaching them while they learn English, and so they are not getting further behind, like the gentleman from New York [Mr. SERRANO] said earlier. It is to make sure that they also learn math, and science and history at the same time that they are learning English, and not just being taught in their native tongue.

Let me talk about an experience that I have had in Texas, in Houston. I was raised in a majority Hispanic school, and I saw in the middle 1960's before there was bilingual programs in Texas what would happen in a high school where a child would come in, and they would stay 2 or 3 days and then would drop out. And in 1973, my first term in the legislature, we actually provided State funding across the board for bilingual. I was a small amount of $6 million, but it was hard to get at that time in 1973.

I realized coming and serving in Washington for my first term here in Congress that so much more is being done on a local basis, both in local school districts and in States for bilingual, and recognizing it. So we do not have those students who come in, whether they are in kindergarten or 11th grade, dropping out after that week. They actually are working in their native tongue so that they can stay there, and they can be educated and they can be productive citizens.

This last year, like a lot of Members, like my colleagues from Florida, I spent a lot of time in the local schools in my district, since I serve on the Committee on Education and Labor. And I am proud that one of my elementary schools has the bilingual teacher of the year, Love Elementary, in the Houston School District. But I had an opportunity this year to both start a bilingual program, a kindergarten program that was bilingual, in September, and the children were really quiet and subdued. And then I went back and visited not that same program, but a different program in May where those children started in that kindergarten with a program in bilingual, but in May they are not speaking Spanish anymore, they are speaking English. And they are aggressive. They want to talk, and they want to talk in English. I was a part of the reading program, and they did not want to talk in Spanish, they wanted to talk in English, whereas when I went in in September I had to read the program in Spanish. But when I went back in May they did not want me to read in Spanish, they wanted it in English, because it was a kindergarten program that started in Spanish, but by May they are speaking English, and they want to be taught in English.

So you do not start in my district or any other district in the kindergarten in bilingual and continue through it through high school. That is not the way the system works. Children are in bilingual for a very short period of time so that they do not get further behind while they are learning English.

Bilingual was funded on a statewide basis in Texas in 1973. If I had my way, we would fund it even more than what we are doing now under the grant program. But we are not, so I ask Members to join with me in opposing the Roth amendment, because we are not doing near enough on the Federal level to eliminate some of the education problems that we have that are caused by our immigration policy. Do not take away what little bit we have.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the amendments offered by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

The bilingual education program included in H.R. 6 is, in essence, an unfunded mandate. H.R. 6 requires State and local taxpayers to pay $7 to $8 for every dollar of Federal funding provided for bilingual education.

H.R. 6 authorizes over $1 billion for bilingual education over the term of the reauthorization, which represents and requires $8 billion in matching spending from State and local education agencies. Not only is bilingual education costly, it simply has not worked.

The original purpose of our bilingual education program was simple: to teach immigrants English quickly and effectively. Bilingual education has gotten away from that simple and important goal, and is hurting those that it was intended to help.

Similarly, the purpose of H.R. 6 was simple: To provide funding for the improvement of America's public education system. With this in mind, we should remember who our clients are. We are serving America's Children; all of our children.

This simple goal is lost in bilingual education, which is counterproductive to preparing all young people to enter, serve, and compete within the American public.

By teaching young people in their native languages, we are handicapping their performance in a highly competitive arena. Bilingual education may make the school day easier for children speaking English as a second language. However, it creates another class of student unable to read, speak and write English in an English-speaking society.

And the United States clearly is an English speaking society. While we have traditionally enjoyed the benefits of great cultural diversity, English has served as a common tie to link all of our religions, races, and cultures—India, Pakistan, Iraq, Eastern Europe, Korea, Orient. With people coming together in South Africa and the Middle East, let's not further splinter our own society by removing the important link of the English language, and reinforcing a social hierarchy based on the ability of our children to speak and communicate in English.

More than ever, education is vital to the success of our young people and our Nation. Let's not continue to handicap our bilingual students and splinter our society by teaching coequal second languages in our schools. Pass the Roth amendments and give our bilingual students the English skills that they will need to compete and succeed in the United States.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman spoke very sincerely, I am sure. But I would like to correct one statement he made. He stated this is a Federal mandate. This is not; it is a grant application program. I just wanted to clear that up.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. The gentleman would not disagree, though, with the fact that I come from a district that has a great, great number of folks from all over the world. Believe me, if there is a test case anywhere, it is in my district, as the gentleman knows. That is the point I am making.

I think what we have to do is concentrate on English learning and that will help us to retain those cultural diversities, whether it be Spanish-speaking countries, European countries, or whatever. What we want to do is to make sure they keep their culture but learn the English language.

Mr. KILDEE. If the gentleman would yield again, I know the gentleman speaks very sincerely on this, we have spoken on this privately. I value the gentleman's views on various issues. But I just want to clarify one point. This is not a federally mandated program.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. The only thing I would like to say in rejoinder to that is that there is a cost involved, and any time you impose this kind of mandate on the States, money has to come from somewhere. So it has to be, in my judgment, an unfunded mandate. We can argue that point, I guess, but nonetheless it is not funded; it is unfunded.

Mr. KILDEE. We may not agree, but I just wanted to make my statement that it is not a federally mandated program.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. I accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my very strong opposition to the amendment from the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Supreme Court has rightly decided that our children are entitled to an education, no matter what their origins.

This legislation would eliminate a program that has been a proven success and its impact would be highly discriminatory on those who cannot defend themselves—our children.

The main goal of bilingual education is to teach children to be competent in English. Studies show:

That bilingual education increases odds for a child's success;

Studies show that teaching children in their native language does not interfere with their learning English;

Studies show that native language instruction helps children keep up with students already being taught in English—English only instruction does not; and

Studies show that parents of bilingual education children are more likely to get involved in their children's education if bilingual instruction is used in schools.

When people say that their grandfather was an immigrant and he succeeded economically without bilingual education, they must remember that years ago the labor pool was a lot less educated and skilled than it is today. Then, low-skilled, lower waged jobs would allow a family to buy a modest home. Now, these jobs barely cover basic living expenses. To compete, all children must be allowed the same opportunity to succeed in today's competitive world.

In my district, close to one-quarter of children in grades K–12 are in bilingual education programs. These children deserve the same chance for success that I want for my own daughter.

In my district, a young man, Raul Huerta, was raised by a single parent who spoke only Spanish and he went through bilingual programs. Raul is now going to Sacramento State University and works at recruiting children of migrant families into higher education.

Also in my district, a young lady, Yesenia Hueremo is one of seven children. Her parents died within a short time of one another, leaving her and her siblings as orphans. Yesenia went through bilingual programs in both elementary and junior high school. Overcoming both language and personal difficulties, and earning a 3.5 grade average, she is now on her way to college. A productive member of our society—is that not what we want from our children?

Yesenia is also bilingual and biliterate. Studies have shown that with the increasingly global economy, business and industry need a work force that is competent in a variety of languages. There are at least 3.3 million children in our schools, like Yesenia, who have the potential of being truly bilingual. They speak almost every language in the world. They are the best hope that we have to produce a multilingual work force—a critical component for America's ability to compete in the world marketplace.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I believe this proposed amendment has no place in an educated society—as a matter of fact, it would create quite the opposite. As a former Peace Corps volunteer, I urge my colleagues to join me in casting a no vote against the Roth amendment.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment, which will do two things which Members of this Chamber have been claiming they wanted to do for a long time. First, it will save the Federal Government a quarter of a billion dollars every year that it is currently spending on a counterproductive program. We can get study after study, for every study that someone brings forth that says this is so effective, there are other studies, in fact more numerous studies, which show that bilingual education, as it exists today, is counterproductive and hurts the people it is intended to help rather than helping those people that people of goodwill are trying to help in this body.

Second of all, it will end one of the largest unfunded mandates ever imposed on local schools, one that costs States and school districts—it will eliminate one of the largest unfunded mandates that have been imposed on public schools, local schools, across States and school districts, billions of dollars every year. Again, we can argue as to whether or not this is an unfunded mandate.

Two weeks ago, Mr. Chairman, when I tried to propose something that would require something as part of the registration process, it was attacked as being an unfunded mandate. Well, obviously what we do here, what laws we have passed, what regulations we have passed in this body, end up mandating, end up forcing, local schools to adopt bilingual education programs whether they want it or not, and it costs them a lot of money. Now how it is defined as an unfunded mandate, that is a matter of debate, but let us note, first of all, as far as the efficacy of the program itself:

Everywhere in the world, every country in the world that has a bilingual problem or situation, recognizes that immersion in a foreign language is the quickest and most effective way to learn that language. Those of my colleagues who have been to Israel have undoubtedly seen how new immigrants from all over the world are taught in that country. Hebrew immersion is the way Israelis have found to speed the assimilation into their society of new citizens who are coming from different places. I guess that we cannot just be as smart as the State of Israel and other countries because there are political considerations here that have to be taken into account, and not educational considerations.

In fact, only in the United States, and only in the Government, does anyone apparently believe that it is more important for students to hold on to their native language in some way rather than quickly learn a common language through the immersion process. That is what happens.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to strike a blow for fiscal sanity, and we do not have the money, it is an ineffective program, but also, Mr. Chairman, it is a huge unfunded mandate. There have been some suggestions today, for example, that in some way those people who are opposing bilingual education are in some way trying to put roadblocks in the way of people who come to this country or other people that have English as a second language. The fact is we are not trying to put roadblocks in the way. We do not believe bilingual education leads to the kind of learning that is beneficial for those who the proponents of bilingual education claim to want to help. In fact we believe that it hurts those young people not to immerse them in the language as we find in every place else in the world.

By the way, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH] is adopted, and local people do believe that it is effective, we are not saying that local schools cannot have bilingual education programs. We are just saying it is not mandated by the Federal Government, and we are not going to pay the bill for something we think is ineffective. If those people at the local level really believe this is effective, they will continue to have bilingual programs, and again no one is suggesting that our people should not be bilingual, that we should not teach people to learn other languages. The fact is that we want people to learn other languages.

By the way, Mr. Chairman, bilingual education, as it is mandated today, that is not the issue at all, but, the way it is mandated, it affects more than just the Spanish language. In my part of the country we have people from Korea, Vietnam, China, Japan, other parts of Asia, and Africa as well. The fact is that this idea, which might be a well-intended idea of providing bilingual education, is a nightmare for the local schools who find out that they have not just Spanish and English, but Hmong, which is a language of the hill tribes in Laos, literally tens of different languages that they are literally supposed to provide education for. It hurts the local school's ability to provide education for all of their children, including children where English is their second language to begin with.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, let us just take one look at the overall effect, and that is what keeps our Nation together, what opens the door of opportunity. It is language that we all share and a love liberty.

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

Mr. Chairman, The bilingual education programs reauthorized in H.R. 6 are critical to promoting equal education opportunities for public school children. Many limited English-proficient students simply cannot learn and compete in the classroom without the English language instruction and supportive services authorized by this bill.

It is important to emphasize that the primary objective of bilingual education is to teach children English, while simultaneously providing instruction in core academic subjects in their native language. This approach is designed to prevent a child from falling behind in basic subjects until they acquire English language proficiency and make the transition into an English-only classroom.

The elimination of these essential programs could cause irreparable harm to tens-of-thousands of children and permanently hamper their academic growth by increasing the likelihood that they will lose their self-esteem, interest in academics, and drop out of school.

Our Nation simply cannot afford to waste these young lives and ultimately lose the benefits of their untapped talents. We must protect our children and defeat the Roth amendments.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a little time, I suppose, to give a history lesson. Having been a history professor at one time, first of all, I want to point out that bilingual education began in the United States in 1839 and included States such as Ohio, Louisiana, and New Mexico, where they taught in several languages because of the diversity of the population. German, French, and Spanish were used for instruction. Then from 1880 to 1917 German instruction was used in Ohio, Minnesota, and Maryland as part of a bilingual education program. In 1908, Mr. Chairman, New York discovered that 13 percent of the 12-year-olds enrolled in New York public schools did not go on to high school. They were children of parents who were not born in the United States. However 32 percent of all other children whose parents were born here did go on to high school.

Mr. Chairman, an individual could drop out of school back in that day and still get a job and still be very much a participant in our society. Unfortunately, or fortunately, at the present time the technology is so great that one positively must compete with a high school education, and it will not be too long until education beyond a high school education will be needed to be functionally literate in our country.

Mr. Chairman, our problem in the past has not been over whether there should be a bilingual education program or not. I led a fight for several years, and then I was joined by the gentleman who is now mayor of Dallas to continue that fight, to indicate that 100 percent of the dollars available for grants should not be only for transitional bilingual—that we should give an opportunity to local areas to determine that is the best approach. All the studies would indicate that no matter which approach is used, whether we use transitional bilingual, whether we use ESL, whether we use immersion, it is usually a 3-to-5-year process to move from the language of one's family and the country from where they came to being fluent in English. Therefore, Congressman BARTLETT and I indicated that we thought that at least a 75- to 25-percent mix should be in order. That was worked out, as I said, with the help of the mayor of Dallas who was a Congressman at that time.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I added language to the legislation before us to add some additional flexibility for local determination. Basically it says, "If you have many children with many languages, and you cannot get certified bilingual educators, you do not have to use transitional bilingual." I am not saying "certified," although I am sure the unions would say "certified," properly prepared people, "you can get a waiver from the secretary."

I think it is important to point out that this is not a mandated program. No one has to participate in this program. Very few people participate in this program.

Last year, for instance, we had about 300,000 students participating in this program—300,000 students out of 43,353,428. Only 300,000 students were participating in this competitive grant program. It is strictly up to a local school district if they want to seek a grant. Most do not, but it is entirely up to the local district whether or not to apply for these funds. Then the grant money is sent out from the secretary's office for that purpose.

When I was growing up in the framing and fruit growing business in my area, Mr. Chairman, of course all the older folks spoke German. When they would come to the packing house to buy their fruit to can, my father could understand what they were saying. My mother could understand and respond.

So we did not lose any customers because somebody in the House understood. I could not do either. We had a mother there who could respond, and we did not lose any customers because she was not able to speak the language that was being spoken. So again, Mr. Chairman, I just make to summarize the history lesson.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. GOODLING was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I just want to repeat again that this is a competitive grant program, a program that a local district can apply for if they wish, a program that does not only say that they must use transitional bilingual education programs. Twenty-five percent of that money, with some flexibility with this new language, can be used for other methods of teaching limited English proficient. If one came with the first group, for instance, that came from Vietnam, immersion was the way to go because the parents of all those youngsters spoke English. If one was not fortunate enough to be in that wave and, let us say, came in during our most recent immigration and arrived here and did not even have any formal education at all in their own language—and most of our young people coming from many areas at the present time have had no formal education at all, nor did their parents—it makes it very, very difficult to meet that 3-to-5-year transition period, if, as a matter of fact, we totally tried to immerse them.

So again, repeating, it is a competitive grant program. School districts can reject it or accept it. No one is required to participate. Only 300,000 students participated last year out of the 43 million that are in public schools in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, let me yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH], the sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for yielding.

I think it is important to note that once they are in the program it is almost impossible to get out of the program, and it is not only immigrant children that are brought into the program but youngsters born here are brought into the program, too.

Basically, what we are concerned about as the issue here is that we want to keep our Nation as one Nation and one people, and the way we do that is keeping the commonality we have. We are the most diverse people in the world. That is why "The Disuniting of America" and books such as this are being published today, because we are concerned about our country turning into another Canada or another Yugoslavia or other places around the world where they do have all these differences. And we are a Nation that has people from every corner of the globe, every linguistic background, and every cultural background, and we want to keep that unity.

That is why I had before quoted, for example, our great war hero, Everett Alvarez, who talked about bilingual. He said, "No, I am not in favor of bilingual education because it holds my people back."

I had a hearing here on Capitol Hill not only with people with a Spanish background but also immigrants from Hungary, immigrants from the Soviet Union, and, yes, people from Cuba, all of them opposed to bilingual education because it harms their people.

We have, for example, Jose Fabila, who is a successful businessman in Sacramento. He said, "No, I'm very much opposed to bilingual education. Bilingual education is created for political purposes."

This we hear over and over, and if we had a hearing on Capitol Hill and invited some of the business people, the common people right off the street, to appear before our committee, we would find that they are not in favor of this program. For example, Ernesto Ortiz is a foreman on a south Texas ranch, and he said it best, I think, when he said, "Children are taught in Spanish at school so they can become busboys and waiters. I am trying to teach them English at home so they can become doctors and lawyers."

This gentleman understood that the language of opportunity in our country is still the English language. Like someone said, "You know, the reason I want my kids taught in English is because the SAT's are given in English and application forms are in English."

In many of these bilingual education programs they only get 30-to-45 minutes a day at the most in English, and they come out of these schools nonproficient in either language. What we are trying to say is that we want to give these young kids a good education so we can assimilate them into our national culture as quickly as we can, and the way we do that is to bring them in and teach them in English, not in some foreign language.

We are not just talking about Spanish here. In Florida they have to teach them in Mandarin and sometimes in Cantonese and all the other different languages they are required to teach youngsters in. We are saying that is not in the best interest of our country.

I was on a talk show in Canada because of this particular legislation, and I wish all my colleagues could have heard the people of Canada talk and what they had to say about what is happening in their country, how the Separatist Party is now the second largest party in Canada, ripping the heart out of that country, and what is going on in various countries around the world because of these linguistic differences.

What we are trying to say is that we want to keep this as one Nation and one people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

(On request of Mr. FORD of Michigan, and by unanimous consent, Mr. GOODLING was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH] just made another misstatement that cannot be left standing with the Members who are watching this from their offices. He said flatly that once they get into bilingual, it is virtually impossible to get out of it.

We fought that battle the last time we reauthorized this legislation with the young gentleman who is now the mayor of a major city in Texas. He was an immersion person, and we finally got around to a compromise and we said that at the end of 3 years of bilingual education the child shall be evaluated to determine whether he needs any more bilingual education, and if he does not, in the opinion of the educators, he is brought out of the program.

It is virtually impossible to stay in the program, not virtually impossible to get out of the program. It is not a permanent educational experience for the child. It is a transition from some language other than English into English. If we want everybody in this country to speak English, we should be supporting this instead of trying to destroy it.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I do wish to reserve some time for myself.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is obfuscating the amendment again and what is behind the amendment.

These kids are not out in 3 years. Sometimes they are in until the seventh or eighth grade and they are nonproficient in either language. That is why the dropout rate is so high, because of bilingualism.

When this was brought in in 1968, they said it was going to be here because the dropout rate is so high. The dropout rate is higher today than it was in 1968.

Here I have a note from Charles Pacheco, an ex-marine who was born here in the United States. His daughter was placed in the bilingual program, not because she did not speak English but because of her Hispanic name, and he tried to get her out of that class and could not get her out. So we are not going to put kids in there and have you tell me they can take them out right away, because we have heard time and time again that it is impossible to get them out.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, let me just close by indicating that in spite of what we may hear from some national leaders, every immigrant parent wants their child to become proficient in the English language as quickly as they possibly can. That is every parent, because they know it is the ladder of success. As we have heard today, there are many who spoke here today who, because of their ability to go through a bilingual program, became very, very successful.

But again, let me repeat that it is a competitive grant program. Nobody has to accept it. Nobody has to request it. Only 300,000 out of some 40 million students participated in it last year. It does not address whether school districts use their own money and State money to do other things in this area. That is something else. But in this program 300,000 students participated out of 43 million.

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, bilingual education, as you have heard from our distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania and other members before me, is a teaching method, along with other methods such as immersion and transition. They are all teaching methods with one goal: To have the non-English speaking student learn English without falling behind in his core subject studies.

You heard one of my colleagues from California tell you that in Israel only the immersion method is used. He is mistaken. I was in Israel in August to visit bilingual education centers where Ethiopian and Eastern European Jews were being taught Hebrew. They used their native language as a transition into Hebrew; a prime example of bilingualism as a good teaching method.

Mr. Chairman, I am a leader in the Hispanic community. For somebody to insinuate that as a supporter of bilingual education, I am un-American or that I wish to separate non-English speaking persons from this country, or that I seek to create chaos is completely wrong.

Mr. Chairman, this is America. We all should learn how to speak English, because that is the only way that an individual in this country can progress. The people who will tell you that this is a movement of subversion are wrong. Along with immigrant bashing, those who oppose bilingual education are taking the simple objective of teaching English to non-English speaking students, and turning this necessary and just program into some sort of clandestine operation that seeks to over-run this country.

Mr. Chairman, I tell you they are wrong, and that the characterization of this teaching method is completely incorrect.

I took an oath to uphold the law of this country. In no way do I want to do anything to make this a weaker country. I only want to make sure that my children, and all our children, are able to speak English.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I support the Roth amendment. I think it is unfortunate that it is being portrayed as somehow anti-Hispanic or anti-immigrant. It is nothing of the kind. Indeed, the evidence on this issue seems to suggest that bilingual education has failed to properly teach children English. And when we have such scarce resources, we as a Government ought to be doing those things that work. No other country in the world that I am aware of uses this type of a bilingual education program to teach children the national language. Every other country uses bilingual education to support minority language maintenance.

What needs to occur, I think, is to recognize the data available on this subject. Thomas Sowell in his book "Inside American Education" cited numerous surveys proving that the great majority of Hispanic parents—more than three-fourths of Mexican-American parents and more than four-fifths of Cuban-American parents—are opposed to the teaching of Spanish in the schools at the expense of English. After all, these are the families who want their children to succeed in the U.S.A.

If we want to help these children, which I believe is the motive of all of us here, then we ought to do those things that encourage their learning English the best. I think that this bilingual education program is one that is ineffective and should be discontinued. I thing the Roth amendment is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, we are talking about teaching methods here. I do appreciate the tenor of the debate we have had so far. As my colleague from California has just suggested, we are not only talking about teaching methods, we are talking about a particular type of teaching method that is a failed teaching method. In fact, many of our colleagues who have been on the floor today supporting bilingual education were actually educated in a nonbilingual education system. In fact, they are giving testimony as to not how important bilingual education is, but instead they have risen before us today in defense of bilingual education. But they themselves are a product of a system that did not have the type of bilingual education system they are advocating today.

In terms of what type of method is used in other countries that has been found to be successful, I would like to differ from my colleague, who stated that Israel has this type of bilingual education system. I have been told by several people who have visited Israel recently that yes, they teach other people who do not speak Hebrew. They teach them to speak Hebrew in their classrooms. They do not, however, have a bilingual education system that teaches non-Hebrew speaking citizens in their own native language. The only languages that are automatic other than Hebrew are courses in how to learn how to speak Hebrew in that particular foreign language.

We have no objection to having classes in the United States teaching people how to speak English. That is not bilingual education. That is not what this debate is about. This debate is about whether we will have a bilingual education system that makes it possible for young people to go through our education process without fully learning the English language.

We believe that the English language should be adopted, not as a punishment, but because we care about young people who are being educated in our system. We know that if they are permitted an easy way out of learning to speak English, that that will be the worst possible condemnation that this society could put on their heads.

The fact is the doorway to economic opportunity, the key to that doorway, is an understanding of English. Every one recognizes that. That is something that is recognized on both sides of the aisle today. What we are coming to now is the debate as to really what is the best method and how can we use our scarce resources in the best possible way to ensure that the young people that come from different lands, that have English as their second language, do become part of the American mainstream and have the opportunity that all other Americans have.

I would suggest to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, who are well intended in this, and to my fellow Americans who are listening today or reading this is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that English immersion, making sure that every student is able to speak the English language by not giving that student an easy way out in learning other things without having to learn English, that the best thing we can do for that student is to not give them that easy way out.

The fact is, America is the land of opportunity for those people who have been prepared to take advantage of the opportunity. Learning English is a prerequisite to enjoying the freedom we have here in America. The two things that keep us together as a Nation is the love of liberty and the English language. That permits all of us to take advantage of the opportunities our forefathers and mothers struggled to build in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the bilingual program does not enable students to achieve proficiency in the English language.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I represent a little over 600,000 people, almost three-quarters of whom speak French as their primary language. I am proud to represent them in this great hall of democracy. My hometown is Lafayette, LA. It is named after one of only two gentlemen who are pictured in the People's Hall, a French citizen named the Marquis of Lafayette, who during the Revolutionary period helped his good friend, George Washington, to combine the resources of the two countries and to fight a war for independence against people who spoke impeccable English.

Two centuries before there was a United States or any State, the people were excluded from Nova Scotia by those same folks who spoke impeccable English, because they were Catholic and there was no first amendment, because they spoke a different language. There was no 5th and 14th amendment, and they settled in the bayous of south Louisiana.

Later in the War of 1812, when an American President and an American hero who became President called upon them to march to the plantations of Chalmette, to stand up and fight against a takeover by folks in red coats who spoke impeccable English, they did so. They did so because they understood that the principles of the democracy which had evolved while they were first here was something worth fighting and dying for.

It is also something worth representing the Seventh District of Louisiana for. I should probably pause at this time and ask a parliamentary inquiry. I do not know the precise rules on using a phrase from another language. This, however, is from an American language.

It is a derivation. It is Cajun Catholic. The phrase is "lache pas la patate." I will have it removed from the RECORD, since I am sure it should not have been in in the first place and since I am sure that virtually no one in this Chamber understands one word of it, due to their lack of education.

What it means is, "Don't drop the potato." That is a literal translation. It is a funny expression, but its meaning is so much more important than its literal words. Many of the romance languages have those kinds of idioms.

What it means is, do not concentrate on the wrong thing so that you lose the basic.

In other words, we have a terrible problem in this Nation with illegal aliens. We have stretched resources trying to cover folks who got here against the law. All of those things I support remedial measures, when we have an Immigration bill. And I want more money for Naturalization and Immigration. I want to support the law.

But when you start losing folks like me, who more often than the leadership on this side of the aisle would care, who support propositions from this side of the aisle, then you must be making a mistake.

I suggest what we are doing is dropping the issue, dropping the potato and losing a much, much more important war.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I had not intended to speak on this item, but I must say that I was motivated to speak not only by the very sensitive remarks of the previous speaker, my colleague from Louisiana, but because of the inspiration of the presentation made earlier by my colleague, the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN].

The gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN] reminds me of some years ago, when a relatively new American, who had come to this country from Latin America, chose to become a schoolteacher as the gentlewoman from Florida did. She, too, had learned her English by way of bilingual experience in southern California, became an educator and, eventually, she was my classroom Spanish teacher, teaching me in my own native tongue—her original native tongue.

One of my frustrations is that the inspiration of that schoolteacher has not pervaded southern California deeply enough. For of all of the parts of the country where we have the potential of developing bilingualism, it is in southern California. Not very long down the line approximately half of our population will be from Latin America.

What a crime it is that we have not taken advantage of that proximity so that we all could read and write and speak English well and read and write and speak Spanish as well.

I remember that Spanish teacher one day, with a twinkle in her eye, this takes me to my colleague from Louisiana, she loved plays on words in Spanish. And the phrase that day was "En la boca cerrada no entran moscas." In English the play on words would suggest that silence is golden. Literally, it says that in closed mouths flies do not enter.

It is also very important around here for us to remember from time to time that we make our point best by being very careful about what we say about the subject that we are advocating. It has been stated many times here on the floor today that there is a horrendous Federal mandate involving bilingual education.

The fact is there is not a Federal mandate. The Bilingual Education Act contains no mandates. It is a voluntary competitive grant program. Title VII requires nothing of any school in the Nation.

Since 1968, the Bilingual Education Act has provided Federal assistance to school districts which operate or wish to start programs for limited-English-proficient students. Under current law and under H.R. 6, schools can apply for grants to start either a bilingual education program or a monolingual English only program for LEP students. There is no Federal mandate of bilingual education programs.

State and local schools implement bilingual programs on their own because they work, not because of the U.S. Congress.

Mr. Chairman, it is very important for us to recognize that in this shrinking world, our opportunity lies with reaching out, understanding better and communicating better with our friends to the south. The most important legislation we have passed, in my mind, since I came to Congress is that which is designed to create a cooperative venture between Canada, Mexico, and the United States that will allow our entire hemisphere to become more competitive in the world marketplace. It will provide jobs and opportunities for all of us, including our children and grandchildren, well into the next century.

Bilingual education is an opportunity. It is not a problem for the American education system.

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise in strong opposition to the Roth amendments to H.R. 6, Improving America's School Act, as it is called.

The Roth amendments would severely weaken and ultimately eliminate title VII, the bilingual education programs of H.R. 6, which were passed by the bipartisan leadership of the Committee on Education and Labor. The Roth amendments would undo a bipartisan initiative with a 26-year history of legislative and classroom success.

It would deprive limited-English-proficient students, who are the fastest growing group of students in the Nation, of critical educational programs. It would also destroy a national infrastructure designed to cope effectively with the students.

The Roth amendments would consign limited-English-proficient children to an inferior education and a generation of students would be lost, I say lost, in the educational system.

For the first time ever, for the first time ever a bipartisan coalition on the Committee on Education and Labor worked together to pass a comprehensive authorization of title VII. These title VII programs have proven to be the best way to teach children with limited English proficiency and to teach them much-needed English language skills.

I want to emphasize, teach them much-needed English skills. Not Spanish; we are not teaching kids Spanish. We are teaching them English, the language of this Nation.

Children who speak languages other than English can be great resources to the United States in our global economy, as just enunciated by my good colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] gave us a good example of his own experiences of growing up in this country, when he said that his mother could understand English but his father could not. And yet the experience that his mother had in understanding English was a good deal for their store, for their business.

My own experience in English was the same, Mr. Chairman. I grew up speaking Spanish as my first language. But I was lucky that my mother and my grandmother spoke English. So they taught me English by teaching me through that first language, Spanish.

By the time I got to grammar school, I knew English. I could read English. The teachers were amazed that I could speak English. This Mexican kid could speak English and read English.

I was taught at home, and the teachers would ask me, "Show the kids how to read English. Tell them about 'See Jack run; see Jane run; watch Spot run.'"

They were amazed that I could do that. One might say that at a very early age I was a teacher's aide.

Mr. Chairman, by teaching English and preserving their native language skills, bilingual education can permit some of our future leaders to retain the skills necessary to negotiate in Mexico in Spanish or with Japan in Japanese or with the Russians in Russian and so on and so on. I want to make this point clear, again, and I do it every time when this senseless type of rhetoric comes before us. We are talking about children. Children who want to learn, who want to learn English. That is what they want to learn.

They want to learn about American history. They want to learn about math and about science and about art, and all that we can teach them.

Without the programs that have been made possible by title XII, limited English-proficient students will not be able to fully appreciate or benefit from education reform. They will be more likely to suffer from high dropout rates, from low rates of academic achievement and disproportionately low rates of placement in gifted and talented programs.

The proliferation of bilingual programs is a testament to the fact that across this country school boards, educators, and parents are more interested in results than in rhetoric. Mr. Chairman, educators and Americans recognize the value bilingual education has in preparing our youth for the 21st century.

Congress, this House, must understand and recognize this important value. It is ludicrous to assert that a multilingual nation will be another Canada or a Yugoslavia, and to intimate that because we know more languages or speak more languages, we will be less Americans. That is ludicrous.

Mr. Chairman, I speak and I have a working knowledge of four languages, English and Spanish and Portuguese and German, and it is because I was able to speak these languages and learn them at an early age that I had opportunities opened up to me in this country. I was an international trade union organizer; I was a U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. system; I am a better Congressman today, and let me tell the Members, I am just as good an American if not a better American than some others who do not know another language.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me just say—at this point, Mr. MENENDEZ addressed the House in Spanish.

For those who did not catch that, I simply said that those of you who do not understand what I am saying might not be able to help American businesses compete in many of the world's emerging markets, such as Mexico, under NAFTA.

It is not about Spanish, it is about a diversity of languages and the customs and cultures of doing business worldwide. Chevrolet learned that when they tried to introduce the Chevy Nova in Latin America. If Members know what "Nova" means in Spanish, basically it means "it does not move," it will not go. Imagine marketing a car that simply would not move.

America's diversity is what makes it uniquely qualified to compete in the global economy. Is it not ironic, then, that some of the most ardent boosters of global trade are here on the floor today, trying to cut off that resource, by putting an end to bilingual education?

While the whole world seems to be moving together toward a truly global village, only here in America do we consider moving backward. We consider retreating from our diversity, to imprison ourselves in our monolingualism.

The bilingual education program is one of our most successful, because it makes sense. There is no question that immigrants to the United States are better off once they learn English. When those of limited English proficiency arrive here, they know they need to learn English, and they want to learn English. The fact is that the goal, the purpose, the ends of the bilingual education program is to take a non-English speaking child and have them become fluent in English—while they move along educationally in their other subjects—math, science, and history.

In my own experience, as a former school board member for 5 years, in a school district where the majority of students were from immigrant families, we enjoyed tremendous success.

For example, a young woman who did not understand English went on not only to conquer the language, but to become a valedictorian of her high school, an honor student at Stevens Institute of Technology, and ultimately the valedictorian of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey. Today she is a doctor.

Only a bilingual education could have made this possible. Every immigrant needs to learn English. But a successful student needs to learn much, much more.

As each of you will recall from your school days, there was more to school than just English. History, math, and science courses round out a complete education. Imagine now if I were your history teacher, lecturing you, as I began my remarks, in Spanish. How do you think you would fare on your final exam? Do you think you would pass my course? Probably not. But do you consider your knowledge of history deficient? Do you consider yourself incapable of learning history? Of course not. You would have passed the test, had it been in English. But it was not, and now you've got to repeat my class. Unless, of course, you decide to drop out, which is what many students of limited English proficiency end up doing. Not because they were incapable of learning, but because nobody gave them a chance to do it.

Now that we have given many students that chance, and begun opening some doors of opportunity for them, amendments proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin seek to slam the doors shut.

Bilingual education costs money, that is true. All education costs money. Putting a student of limited English proficiency through the same classes, taught in a language he does not understand, over and over and over again—costs even more money. It is taxpayer money wasted.

The cost of bilingual education, like the cost of English education, is an investment. Not only an investment in preparing our students to compete in a global economy, but in empowering all students to do their best, and to become productive, successful Americans. Do not shut any child out. Do not shut American business out. Defeat the Roth amendments.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think sometimes in the course of debates like this we have sometimes gotten angry and sometimes not discussed what the real issue is. I think today, instead, we have actually had a fairly serious debate about these amendments offered by our colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH], and I appreciate them.

I can tell the Members that 21 years ago in my State, in our legislature we had a proposal called bilingual education offered in the State of Texas, and I remember being asked to coauthor it. I asked a lot of questions of the author, a gentleman named Carlos Truan from Corpus Christi, a member of the House at that time, about that legislation and how in the world we would get to the point where we would do what it is that all of us know bilingual education is meant to do, that is to teach a child English, math, reading, writing skills, social studies, geography, all the rest, in a way that educates the child and in fact leaves no one else behind, not the English-speaking child, not the Spanish-speaking child, or others in the class who may have been brought up to speak as a first language a completely different language than the two I just mentioned.

I remember thinking, "This will not be easy," but I coauthored that legislation that year, and I remember going home to my State representative district and hearing from both sides very loudly, sometimes, about how good it was and how bad it was. What I found out, boy, this is the difference between the school districts I represented.

I had several school districts in my legislative district. I thought maybe it is the way it is being administered, but no, I found out that some schools within the district had a very different opinion, as well, about how effective or how bad it was. Then, no, I discovered even more importantly, within the same schoolhouse programs met with great success and others had great problems. The reasons, I found out, were really and truly basically how it was being administered by the teacher in the classroom.

My great fear, I say to my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH] about his amendments is simply that I am afraid his amendments attempt to take away some of the very options that school districts now have. Let me say that in terms of both of his amendments, and I know that we are only considering one at present, but I know that probably what I consider the most effective way in which to address the needs of children with limited English proficiency to make a smooth transition into our society, is to allow them to develop those basic skills in areas like math and science and other areas, as well as in writing and reading.

But to do so, we have found, in their native language can be helpful, and a lot of schools and school districts have determined that there are different methods of teaching that help move us along in that direction. Whether it is English immersion known as English Only Program that they think will meet their best local needs or whether or not they believe we should have limited English proficient students' bilingual education programs, English as a second language program, then I think those are decisions that can best be made, quite honestly, even in the classrooms, and I know some school districts do not share that view and a lot of them want to say well, we will mandate, some States have often said we will mandate how it will be done. I think the last thing we ought to do here in Congress is mandate how they ought to be done. I really and truly believe that our goals should be what the gentleman from Wisconsin notes his goal is and that is to see to it that we remain united as a Nation, that we do the very very best we can for all of the students in that classroom.

I happen to think that a bilingual education program that is properly run can properly do that. I do not think that is beyond the realm of our capabilities as a country, as a people, as educators. I happen to believe very strongly that bilingual education programs do work. I can show evidence, as you can show me evidence of the problems along the way, I can show you evidence. We have heard some of it discussed here today that these programs do work, and I think it would be a mistake to cut off funds and try to deny the reality that children who speak a language other than English make up the fastest growing segment of our K through 12 population. and that is a fact.

And I think to simply deny that and attempt to cut off the funds is a mistake. I do not think that is how we get to solve the problems that others have spoken to and alluded to here in the debate on the education bill.

I think what we need to do is maintain the course we have set for ourselves in what I consider to be a very progressive bill on education.

I want to compliment my colleagues, the gentlemen from Michigan, Mr. KILDEE and Mr. FORD, and others on the committee for this legislation.

I would ask my colleagues to defeat the Roth amendment and let us move on to the real issues that confront this Nation, and that is educating our children.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, when I began working for the Federal Government I was an auditor and I was assigned to the migrant farm worker program. I went down to the Rio Grande Valley of Texas, with no particular ideological bent, and I was brought in to talk to a leader of the barrios down there. It was a beautiful September day, and this man was smiling, as only a father can look when he is expressing the pride he has in his child. His youngest daughter had started school. All of his other children were in the migrant stream.

The way that it used to work is that the children had to work in the migrant stream, they needed the money, and the fact is they were not welcome in the Texas school system.

We were talking that morning, it was about 10:30, and as we were talking, this little girl came running home. She was crying her eyes out. She was a beautiful little girl, kindergarten, 5 years old. She came into the House, and it was actually kind of a shack. She did not want to tell us what had happened and finally we got it out of her, that in her excitement to show the teacher what she knew, she had burst out a word in Spanish, and at that time the Texas education agency did not allow Spanish to be spoken in the school system, and she had been physically punished on her calves and, in fact, her calves were black and blue. This 5-year-old girl had been beaten because in her excitement to participate in school she had been physically punished for speaking Spanish.

I asked the official of the State education agency what he thought about having bilingual education and teaching a little respect and appreciation for the Spanish culture and he told me, why do they need to learn about burritos and tacos and things like that; that is what the Spanish culture is all about. They do not need that. If they want to get ahead, they need to learn our culture and we are doing the best thing for them.

Mr. Chairman, in the years following, people like Armando Rodriguez and Gil Sanchez, and many people whose names have well been forgotten now, started the bilingual education program and the Texas education agency changed its attitude. And thousands of children have had an opportunity to participate in this society and this economy because of the value and appreciation of having a bilingual capability, an appreciation for bilingual education in the public school system in Texas, and in fact around the country.

This is an important program. This is part of what America is all about, and this is something we owe to all America's children.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Roth amendment. I come to this debate as a classroom teacher for more than 20 years. I come to this debate as a former school board member, and president of the school district in San Diego, CA, which has had as much experience in bilingual education as any school district in this Nation. I have been in hundreds of classrooms, talked to thousands of students and their parents.

This is not a failed educational method. Bilingual education works in San Diego, CA, and all over this Nation.

I have watched the debate for the last hour or so, and the aims of all of my colleagues are the same. The aims are to teach English to children as rapidly as possible.

I have seen bilingual education work in San Diego, I have seen the test results, I have talked with children. It does work.

We cannot let children fall behind in the basic skills of mathematics and social studies while they are learning English. Bilingual education is a way for these students to keep up with those basic skills while learning the English language.

I beg my colleagues in this House not to hurt the children in San Diego and the rest of this Nation. Do not cut this program out. Do not allow bilingual education to fail. It is a working program and we should continue to help these children.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong opposition to the Roth amendment that seeks to eliminate federally supported bilingual education programs.

This amendment would eliminate title VII, the 25-year-old Bilingual Education Act, that reauthorizes bilingual education programs. Title VII grants have helped school districts develop and implement bilingual education programs. Bilingual education is a proven success at teaching students who come to school speaking a language other than English.

As we all know, most funding for education, including bilingual education, comes from State and local governments. The Federal Government has sole jurisdiction over immigration policy; it must share the responsibility to serve the needs of the immigrants that Federal policy allows to enter the United States. Limited English proficient students represent the fastest-growing segment of our school-age population.

In 1990, one of every seven students lived in a home where a language other than English was spoken. The Federal Government should support providing these students the programs they need to develop the language skills to succeed.

I urge my colleagues to vote no on the Roth amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, one out of every seven children in America, living in almost every district in this Nation, starts school speaking a language other than English. Through the bilingual education act, these children including Hispanics, Asians, Armenians, Native Americans, and many others, are able to learn and become future teachers, doctors and leaders in our communities. Now, after 25 years of success, bilingual education is being threatened. The Roth amendment will directly take away the only program that gives thousands of innocent children the chance at a good education and a successful future.

This amendment which eliminates bilingual education will severely hinder the ability of teachers and schools to effectively reach the fastest growing segment of the kindergarten through 12th grade population which is minority children. Bilingual education, which has bipartisan support, helps these children improve their English and ensures that they do not fall behind in other essential subjects such as math. Therefore, it is critical that any serious and comprehensive education reform must address the needs of an increasingly diverse student body in our nation's rural, suburban, and urban areas. Striking these programs which have been so successful towards giving our children a quality education is the same as turning our backs to the future of our country. Thousands of students will begin to suffer from language-related educational problems including low academic achievement, low self esteem, and high student drop-rates.

In my own State of New Mexico, one out of every five students is limited-English-proficient. In addition, 41 programs funded under the Bilingual Education Act would lose the chance to assist students towards receiving a quality education—10,000 students in New Mexico alone would be deprived of the bilingual service they now receive and need.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will not only prevent our students from learning, but it will also imply to children that their native languages and cultures are not worth preserving. One group that will be harmed by the amendment are native Americans. The amendment seeks to revisit a dark chapter in the history of Federal-Indian policy where the Federal Government prohibited Indian children from speaking their native language in school. In the 1800's, this Government took Indian children out of their homes, put them in boarding schools, forbade them for speaking their own language, and severely punished them if they did speak their own language. This policy resulted in the destruction of native cultures and hundreds of native languages. Of the several hundred native languages that once existed in the United States, only 155 are still remembered or spoken today. Many of these languages have fallen out of use. Today, we in Congress recognize the errors of the past and understand the important role that language plays in education. Specifically, Congress has worked to preserve, promote, and protect the rights of native Americans to use, practice and develop their own languages. To eliminate bilingual education would be to relive the mistakes of the past by continuing the destruction of native language culture. Teaching each child the importance of their native culture and history is paramount to any students's ability to not only comprehend the present, but to accept the challenges of the future.

Mr. Chairman, the question is, "do we condemn those children who grow up with a language other than English? Or do we encourage the students and their peers to create a learning environment that is both challenging and expressive. Voting for the Roth amendment will not create a learning environment and is the same as voting against our own children's future. The education of innocent children is at stake, and bilingual education is essential for all children in order to keep our Nation strong. Let's not interfere with what works, and instead enable teachers to do what they do best—teach.

Mr. DOOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Roth amendment because I believe that bilingual education is an important link in our Nation's public education system. The Bilingual Education Act is the only Federal education program specifically designed to assist State and local education agencies in meeting the needs of limited-English-proficient students.

In California there are more than 1 million limited-English-proficient students attending our schools. The research on bilingual education is clear. Use of both English and the child's native language serves to promote the learning of English, and allows students to achieve in other subjects such as math and science—raising prospects for overall success in school.

I have seen over and over again in my congressional district, the benefits of bilingual education. We merely cripple children's prospects for success and assimilation if we are not willing to acknowledge a language barrier and assist in overcoming it. Bilingual education gives thousands of children in my—and all over the country—the tools to succeed, and the ability to become productive, law-abiding citizens.

For 25 years, we have watched as kids have assimilated into our society with aid of bilingual education. We must not destroy the most important citizenship program that we have in this country today.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Chairman, as both a Representative of a highly multicultural district, and as a former educator, I must oppose this amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin. The amendment before us would eliminate the Federal Bilingual Education Program, including funding for materials, staff training, teachers, and aides. It would also prohibit the use of native language instruction. These policies ignore the growing diversity of our student population.

New York City is populated with thousands of immigrants who have greatly enriched our economic and social fabric. Our public school system provides educational services, which include bilingual education programs, to a growing immigrant student population. I find it unconscionable that in this land of milk and honey we would seek to eliminate bilingual education programs, services and/or resources for language minority children. I am saddened that we would seek to weaken and ultimately diminish the Bilingual Education Program by prohibiting the use of the native language for instructional purposes.

This proposal, clearly, offends those of us who endorse the educational goals of preparing our students for this increasingly multicultural world. If we want to provide an education of enrichment of all our children, then we must oppose this amendment. I strongly urge you to vote "no."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GENE GREEN OF TEXAS

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas: Page 688, line 8, strike "$40,000,000" and insert "$100,000,000".

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would raise the authorization of the Emergency Immigrant Education Program for fiscal year 1995 from $40 million to $100 million. This amendment, as proposed, would increase the amount to $100 million, however, a compromise has been reached with Republican Members and it is my hope that this amendment is now acceptable to both sides of the aisle.

The Emergency Immigrant Education Program provides funding to States who have been paying the cost of education for children of recent immigrants to this country. These children often are more costly to educate since they often have special needs and this program offers a moderate amount of Federal assistance to recognize the Federal Government's responsibility to compensate States for the costs associated with our Federal immigration policy.

We are asking for an increase in authorized amount because the program has not kept pace with the steady increase in the number of immigrant children in our schools. As you may be aware, States such as Texas and California have recently begun legal action against the Federal Government in order to recover the costs associated with immigration. This program addresses part of those costs and is supported by both Gov. Pete Wilson and Gov. Ann Richards.

Passing this amendment will send a strong message to the States that the Federal Government can and will accept responsibility for its actions. It is our Federal immigration policy that causes much of the burden on our public schools and this amendment will help those States who have thus far been bearing a greater share of this burden.

I urge my colleagues to accept this amendment and give our States the resources they need to provide education services to all children.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, this is a tremendously important amendment. I compliment the gentleman for offering it, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JOHNSTON], as well as the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], who have done a wonderful job in pushing this amendment forward.

In my home State of Florida over the last 5 years we have expended almost $1 billion on the program of educating newcomers to our State. It is a terrible burden upon the States who are impacted tremendously by people coming from offshore the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this is a responsibility of the Federal Government. The States have no control over who is admitted to the schools or who is even admitted to our shores. This is clearly a tremendous responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I compliment the gentleman for this amendment, and urge its approval.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I commend my colleague and good friend from Florida, HARRY JOHNSTON, for his hard work in seeking to assist Florida and other highly impacted States in recouping resources strained by immigration—both legal and illegal. Because of its rapid growth, which routinely outpaces the census, Florida is a donor State in many of the Federal funding formulas. Add to that our border location and the wonderful quality of life and opportunities we offer, and you begin to understand the root of our problem with immigration. The social costs associated with immigration should be a matter of Federal policy and should be addressed by Federal solutions. Yet Florida is spending hundreds of millions of dollars on her own—without nearly the support from the Federal Government that is needed. Of course I support any measure designed to pay back those dollars. And I think that is the intention of this amendment, which is specifically designed to help States cope with the costs of providing emergency education for immigrants.

At the same time, however, I recognize the inherent problem with making more resources available for immigrant services—and that is the magnet effect. America is viewed by millions around the world as the land of opportunity, a place where dreams come true through employment, health care, and education. If we continue to expand the authorization for services every time more people seek to avail themselves of those services, we will embark on an indefinite and unsustainable spiral. Given our precarious Federal budget situation, we cannot keep increasing funding every time we have an increase in the numbers of refugees and immigrants seeking entry into this country. So my concern with this amendment is that it will be viewed and implemented as a new authorization, a new baseline level for future services that will act as a magnet for ever increased immigration—rather than a payback for the costs already incurred by the States.

Ms. THURMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Green/Johnston amendment to increase Emergency Immigrant Education Act funding to $100 million dollars.

Today, there are 700,000 immigrant students in the United States that qualify for support under the E.I.E.A.

At a funding level of $40 million dollars, only 460,000 students can receive support. Even among those served, the amount of aid per student does not come close to covering actual costs. Local school systems are being forced to absorb the difference.

Increasing the E.I.E.A. allotment to $100 million is an important first step, but only part of the solution. the distribution formula itself also needs to be reformed.

Mr. Chairman, Floridians are very generous people, but they simply cannot continue to carry the financial burden of our Nation's immigration policies.

About 150,000 foreign born students, both legal and illegal immigrants, are costing Florida $975 million each year. This is money that won't be available to improve health care, build parks, expand prison space, or make roads safer. These are all legitimate State responsibilities that are being shortchanged because of Federal immigration policies.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that all students, regardless of legal status, are entitled to a public education. I say it is about time that the Federal Government help States like Florida and others that have the largest number of immigrant students.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GOODLING TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GENE GREEN OF TEXAS

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODLING to the amendment offered by Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas:

In the amendment made to page 688, line 8, strike "$100,000,000" and insert "$75,000,000".

Mr. GOODLING (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I have said many times that I am very thankful that I was the superintendent of Spring Grove Schools and not the superintendent of Dade County Schools. Every morning he must wonder how many hundred new students he has and where he is going to get the funds in order to finance their education. Until we do something out of the proper committee in relation to immigration, we certainly have a responsibility to help the local districts with those students who are coming into their districts from other countries.

Mr. Chairman, what I do not agree with is that we would move immediately from an authorization level of $40 million to an authorization level of $100 million. I realize we are up against the $40 million figure and the ceiling must be raised. My amendment says that we will move from the $40 million authorization level to an authorization level of $75 million, rather than $100 million.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to my chairman, the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment to the amendment is reasonable. It moves us along the road, and I would urge its adoption.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, like the chairman of my committee, I also think this amendment is acceptable and is a good compromise. We worked this out to provide that funding for the children.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Miller-Johnston amendment to increase the fiscal year 1995 authorization level for the emergency immigrant education program from $40 to $100 million.

The Federal Government implements and enforces immigration policy. It is our responsibility. Yet State and local governments have shouldered much of the financial burden of providing services to illegal and legal immigrants, particularly in the areas of education, health, and criminal justice. While illegal immigrants do contribute tax dollars, most of this money goes to the Federal Treasury.

Federal immigration policy is nothing short of an unfunded mandate on local and State governments. The Federal Government sets the numbers that are allowed in legally and has basically failed in keeping individuals from entering illegally. The education, health, and welfare costs of these individuals—required by Federal law—are left to cities, counties, and States. This is simply unfair.

This amendment is a first step in coming to terms with the enormous costs incurred by local and State governments in the area of education. Quite frankly, it is not enough. There are currently 700,000 students in the United States that qualify for support under this program. Only 460,000 students can receive support at a funding level of $40 million. The Federal Government has a responsibility to fully reimburse local and State governments for all costs associated with immigration.

Many of my colleagues who do not come from immigration-impacted States may ask, why should the Federal Government pay for these programs, especially when the Federal Government has an enormous debt? Immigration is a Federal responsibility and immigration-related costs should therefore be a Federal fiscal priority. State and local governments are experiencing dramatic budgetary shortfalls, and are being forced to cut vital services, even in the face of growing populations. Crucial State and local responsibilities are being compromised by Federal immigration policy.

Mr. Chairman, I firmly believe that the Federal Government has an obligation to fully reimburse State and local governments for the costs of illegal immigration. I also believe that we need to make corresponding cuts in the budget in order to fully pay for this reimbursement. It is the right and the fiscally responsible action to take.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GENE GREEN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GENE GREEN], as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there other amendments to title VII?

If not, the Clerk will designate title VIII.

The text of title VIII, as modified, is as follows:

"TITLE VIII—IMPACT AID

"SEC. 8001. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) certain activities of the Federal Government place a financial burden on the local educational agencies serving areas where such activities are carried out; and

"(2) it is the shared responsibility of the Federal Government, the States, and local educational agencies to provide for the education of children connected to those activities.

"SEC. 8002. PURPOSE.

"In order to fulfill the Federal responsibility to assist with the provision of educational services to federally connected children, and to help them meet challenging State standards, it is the purpose of this title to provide financial assistance to local educational agencies that—

"(1) experience a substantial and continuing financial burden due to the acquisition of real property by the United States;

"(2) educate children who reside on Federal property and whose parents are employed on Federal property;

"(3) educate children of parents who are in the military services and children who live in low-rent housing;

"(4) experience sudden and substantial increases in enrollments because of military realignments; or

"(5) need special assistance with capital expenditures for construction activities because of the enrollments of substantial numbers of children who reside on Indian lands or who are defined in sections 2 and 3 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, 81st Congress; 20 U.S.C. 631 et seq.).

"SEC. 8003. PAYMENTS RELATING TO FEDERAL ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Where the Secretary, after consultation with any local educational agency and with the appropriate State educational agency, determines for a fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1999—

"(1) that the United States owns Federal property in the local educational agency, and that such property—

"(A) has been acquired by the United States since 1938;

"(B) was not acquired by exchange for other Federal property in the local educational agency which the United States owned before 1939; and

"(C) had an assessed value (determined as of the time or times when so acquired) aggregating 10 percent or more of the assessed value of all real property in the local educational agency (similarly determined as of the time or times when such Federal property was so acquired);

"(2) that the ownership by the United States of such Federal property places a substantial and continuing financial burden on such agency; and

"(3) that such agency is not being substantially compensated for the loss in revenue resulting from such ownership by increases in revenue accruing to the agency from the conduct of Federal activities with respect to such Federal property, then such agency shall be entitled to receive for such fiscal year such amount as, in the judgment of the Secretary, is equal to the continuing Federal responsibility for the additional financial burden with respect to current expenditures placed on such agency by the ownership of such Federal property.

"(b) AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount to which a local educational agency is entitled to receive under subsection (a) for a fiscal year—

"(A) shall not exceed—

"(i) the amount which, in the judgment of the Secretary, such agency would have derived in such year, and would have had available for current expenditures, from the property acquired by the United States; and

"(ii) the amount which is equal to the difference of—

"(I) the maximum amount that such agency is eligible to receive for such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(1)(C); and

"(II) the amount that such agency receives in such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(2); and

"(B) shall be reduced by the Secretary by an amount equal to the amount of revenue, if any, that such agency received from activities conducted on such property during the previous year.

"(2) APPLICATION OF CURRENT LEVIED REAL PROPERTY TAX RATE.—In making a determination of the amount that would have been derived in such year under paragraph (1)(A)(i), the Secretary shall apply the current levied real property tax rate for current expenditures levied by fiscally independent local educational agencies or imputed, for fiscally dependent local educational agencies, to the current annually determined aggregate assessed value of such acquired Federal property.

"(A) the eligibility of a local educational agency for State aid for free public education; or

"(B) the amount of such aid; or

"(2) make such aid available to local educational agencies in a manner that results in less State aid to any local educational agency that is eligible for such payment than it would receive if it were not so eligible.

"(b) STATE EQUALIZATION PLANS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A State may reduce State aid to a local educational agency that receives a payment under section 8004 or under the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) as such Act existed prior to the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994 (other than a payment under section 2 or an increase in payments described in paragraphs (2)(B), (2)(C), (2)(D), or (3)(B)(ii) of section 3(d)) for any fiscal year if the Secretary determines, and certifies under subsection (c)(3)(A), that such State has in effect a program of State aid that equalizes expenditures for free public education among local educational agencies in such State.

"(2) COMPUTATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a program of State aid equalizes expenditures among local educational agencies if, in the second preceding fiscal year, the amount of per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the highest such per-pupil expenditures or revenues did not exceed the amount of such per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the lowest such expenditures or revenues by more than 10 percent.

"(i) disregard local educational agencies with per-pupil expenditures or revenues above the 95th percentile or below the 5th percentile of such expenditures or revenues in the State; and

"(ii) take into account the extent to which a program of State aid reflects the additional cost of providing free public education in particular types of local educational agencies, such as those that are geographically isolated, or to particular types of students, such as children with disabilities.

"(3) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding paragraph (2), if the Secretary determines that the State has substantially revised its program of State aid, the Secretary may certify such program for any fiscal year only if—

"(A) the Secretary determines, on the basis of projected data, that the State's program will meet the 10 percent disparity standard described in paragraph (2) in that fiscal year; and

"(B) the State provides an assurance to the Secretary that, if final data do not demonstrate that the State's program met such standard for that year (or that it met such standard with a greater percentage of disparity than anticipated), the State will pay to each affected local educational agency the amount by which it reduced State aid to the local educational agency on the basis of such certification, or a proportionate share thereof, as the case may be.

"(c) PROCEDURES FOR REVIEW OF STATE EQUALIZATION PLANS.—

"(1) WRITTEN NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any State that wishes to consider payments described in subsection (b)(1) in providing State aid to local educational agencies shall submit to the Secretary, not later than 120 days before the beginning of the State's fiscal year, a written notice of its intention to do so.

"(B) afford an opportunity for a hearing, in accordance with section 8011(a), to any local educational agency adversely affected by such certification.

"(4) NON-QUALIFICATION PROCEDURES.—If the Secretary determines that a program of State aid does not qualify under subsection (b), the Secretary shall—

"(A) so notify the State; and

"(B) afford an opportunity for a hearing, in accordance with section 8011(a), to the State, and to any local educational agency adversely affected by such determination.

"(A) the amount of such payment; multiplied by

"(2) PROHIBITION.—A State may not make a reduction described in paragraph (1) before its program of State aid has been certified by the Secretary under subsection (c)(3).

"(e) REMEDIES FOR STATE VIOLATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary or any aggrieved local educational agency may, without exhausting administrative remedies, bring an action in a United States district court against any State that violates subsection (a) or subsection (d)(2) or fails to carry out an assurance provided under subsection (b)(3)(B).

The clerk of the court shall promptly transmit a copy of the petition to the Secretary. The Secretary shall then file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary's action was based, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(2) FINDINGS OF FACT.—The findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence. The Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify the Secretary's previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(3) REVIEW.—The court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there amendments to title VIII?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FISH

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: On page 694, after line 7, insert the following:

"(e) ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR HEAVILY IMPACTED LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—

Page , strike line and all that follows through line (subsection (a) of section 8013) and insert the following:

"(a) PAYMENTS FOR FEDERAL ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of making payments under section 8003 (except subsection (e) of such section), there are authorized to be appropriated $16,750,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999.

"(2) PAYMENTS FOR HEAVILY IMPACTED LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—For the purpose of making payments under section 8003(e), there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999.

Mr. FISH (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan reserves a point of order on the amendment, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, much of the debate over H.R. 6 has centered around the role of the Federal Government in education. I am a firm believer that the primary responsibility for education lies with the States. However, when the Federal Government directly affects the ability of a school district to provide the best education it can for its students, the Federal Government must be involved—hence Congress established the Impact Aid Program. It is hypocrisy that as this House has moved toward a greater involvement in education policy—mandates, standards, and requirements—it has turned it's back on impact aid. Where is our responsibility to the children in the school districts in America which have suffered a loss of tax base either because a sizable number of students reside on military bases, or Indian land, or because the Federal Government has literally taken land from the school district.

My amendment deals specifically with section 2 of the Impact Aid Program. Section 2 provides funds to school districts where tax roles have been reduced because of acquisition of property by the Federal Government after 1938. For several years section 2 has been funded at 55 to 60 percent of authorization levels. The result is impacted school districts have not been compensated with a payment in lieu of taxes needed to make up for the diminished tax base resulting from the loss of this land. This to me is a failure of responsibility by the Federal Government that caused the problem in the first place.

Mr. Chairman, it happens that many of the school districts that receive section 2 moneys have been able to maintain strong education programs in their districts because the payments received make up only a small portion of their overall budgets, or they are still able to generate adequate revenue from the remaining taxable lands in their districts. However, there are section 2 school districts that have lost over 25 percent of their local taxable lands. With a small tax base and decreasing impact aid payments, the only options for these schools is to continue to increase local property taxes, and continue to cutback educational expenditures. How does one explain that a teacher is being laid off or a child's school is closing because Congress no longer feels the responsibility to make payments to school districts on land that was formerly within its boundaries.

I reluctantly accept that section 2 impact aid may never be fully funded. What this amendment does, is establish a category for severely impacted school districts. It acknowledges that there are school districts which cannot absorb steadily decreasing impact aid payments, and need additional assistance to provide their students with the education they deserve. I would make eligibility dependent on a 25 percent or greater land taking and cap funding at the level of full entitlement for eligible school districts.

My amendment mirrors the creation of a new subcategory of funding created under section 3 of the Impact Aid Program. The section 3 subcategory acknowledges that there are section 3 schools that are severely impacted by Federal activities. My amendment merely asks this House to acknowledge that there are section 2 school districts that are also severely impacted by Federal activities. It demands our support.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of Representative FISH's impact aid amendment to H.R. 6, Improving America's Schools Act of 1994. Impact aid is a program which compensates school districts for revenue lost when Federal ownership or Federal activity adversely interferes with any or all of the basic revenue sources school districts avail themselves of: residential taxes, property taxes from business and industry, sales taxes, income taxes, and local licenses and fees. In essence, impact aid is simply general operating revenue for the loss of what would otherwise be an existing tax base. For some school districts, impact aid is their single largest source of revenue.

Mr. FISH's amendment deals specifically with section 2 of the impact aid program, which provides funds to school districts where tax roles have been reduced because of procurement of property by the Federal Government. One must look at the dollars a school district receives from impact aid as a payment from the Federal Government to help pick up the cost of running a school, just as one looks at the dollars paid to the school district from local property taxpayers. The one thing all these dollars, Federal and local property taxpayers have in common, is that they provide the school district with the flexibility needed to operate a school districtwide program. Take away or reduce any of these funding sources and the district loses its ability to effectively operate a districtwide educational reform program. Without the Federal dollars received from impact aid, a federally impacted school district will have little success at developing an educational reform effort.

The Highland Falls-Fort Montgomery School District, the site of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, is an example of a school district that has been recognized for its high quality, but whose quality is threatened by the continued negative economic circumstances that have forced the district schools to cut staff, services, and programs. Unless a correcting formula is found to balance the economic instability, the quality, upon which students and parents have a right to defend, will be in danger of being lost.

Mr. Chairman, the Fish amendment establishes a category for severely impacted school districts. It acknowledges that there are school districts which cannot absorb steadily decreasing impact aid payments, and need additional assistance to provide their students with quality education. Additionally, this amendment would make eligibility dependent on a 25 percent or greater land taking and cap funding at the level of full entitlement for eligible school districts.

The greatest challenge for the Impact Aid Program is to provide school districts the resources to create a learning environment necessary to achieve the national goals established by the President and the governors. Highland Falls-Fort Montgomery School District is meeting these goals. More than 20 million students are affected by the Impact Aid Program. These students deserve a chance. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this important amendment.

POINT OF ORDER

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] insist on his point of order?

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, reluctantly, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], proposes to amend the amendment to H.R. 6 offered by myself on February 24, 1994, and found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 24, 1994, on pages 2986 through 2991.

The amendment was previously agreed to. Accordingly, this amendment is not in order.

I call the Chair's attention to section 27.1 of chapter 27 of Deschler's Procedure, which provides as follows: "It is fundamental that it is not in order to amend an amendment already agreed to."

Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, No. 1, it was only in the last 2 or 3 minutes that I learned the point of order would lie against this amendment. I would hope that we could have some debate as to why it is unseemly to do what we have done in another section of this bill for section 2 school recipients. I think the burden falls on the leadership of the committee to tell the House the answer.

Specifically, I would say that the background that brings the gentleman to make this point of order is quite unusual, and I doubt if Mr. Deschler had this in mind.

The fact of the matter was, there was an error in the drafting by legislative counsel that required a change when the bill was brought to the House floor. It is not a question of an amendment to change anything that the committee had agreed to. It was the committee's work product which was not faithfully reported by legislative counsel. If anything, it was the most technical of amendments to put back in what they had intended from the beginning. This could be called an oversight, a printing error, but not a substantive amendment.

I do think that my amendment is within the purview and the context of an amendment to an amendment under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Is there further discussion on the point of order? If not, the Chair is prepare to rule.

The Chair rules that the Fish amendment would, in fact, insert language in a portion of the bill which has already been amended; that is, on page 694.

The Chair further finds that on February 24, an amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] and adopted in the committee rewrote the bill from page 689 to page 729.

Accordingly, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I do that because I want to emphasize that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] was completely in order. It was the subcommittee's language that was inadvertently included in the bill reported by the full committee, which was a mistake. In order to get the full committee's language into the bill, it had to be offered as part of an en bloc amendment. So, I am merely rising to say that that was not my understanding that this was the way this was going to be handled, and I think it was not handled properly.

Mr. KILDEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I share the same concern that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] shares. I think, however, the outcome would have been the same. I have great respect for the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and I have great respect for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], but I am convinced in my own heart that the outcome would have been the same.

However, I will assure the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that I will be most happy to have hearings on this issue and see whether we can come up with some approach to the problems the gentleman seeks to solve. I am convinced, as I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, that the outcome would have been the same, that the amendment would have been defeated. I felt reluctantly compelled to raise the point of order.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I would not question the fact that the outcome would have been the same. I probably would have assisted in that effort. However, the understanding that we thought we had was that he would be allowed to offer his amendment because the mistake was made in drafting the legislation.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Are there further amendments to title VIII?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MACHTLEY

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MACHTLEY: Page 695, line 6, insert "or employed on property under the jurisdiction of the uniformed services" after "United States Code)".

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman reserves a point of order on the amendment, and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. MACHTLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the last order from the Chair, my intentions are to speak on this amendment and to offer an opportunity for other Members to speak on this amendment, and then we will withdraw this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BATEMAN].

Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the proposition which the Machtley amendment would have placed before the House. It is something that needs to be done, ought to be done, and I hope we will find a vehicle by which it can be done.

Mr. MACHTLEY. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, today along with the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ORTON] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], I am offering an amendment to strengthen the Education Department's Impact Aid Program.

For many years and with strong support in Congress, impact aid has helped literally thousands of school districts cope with lost revenue resulting from Federal activities and employees who did not fully contribute to the local tax base.

In my home State of Rhode Island impact aid helps many of our school districts enhance the level of education for our children. In fact, without impact aid our children would be given an inferior education. Without this critical support, the adverse impact of our naval base would be far too much for our local school districts to meet with their property taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that H.R. 6 continues the Impact Aid Program at a reasonable level of support, providing some $775 million in funding in fiscal year 1995. However, while the bill includes what are called military "b"'s as eligible for impact aid, it does not address the impact of what are called civilian "b"'s which have been covered for many years by our Federal Government.

Those familiar with impact aid know that "b" students, and I am not talking about the grades which they get but the category in which they fall, are children of parents who work but do not live on the military base, while "a" students' parents both work and live on the military base. My amendment would deal with the defense aspect of this, only.

Mr. Chairman, last year civilian "b"'s accounted for some $43 million, which was merely 6.4 percent of the entire impact aid. Our amendment would simply aid the civilian "b"'s, as has been done in the past, and which all of the communities are now counting on, in determining which Federal employees' children are to be counted for impact aid support.

Our reasoning for this amendment is, I think, solid, and has been the reasoning which has permitted this to be used in the past. Although local school districts receive property taxes from the Nation's civilian employees, they are unable to levy taxes on the employees' place of work. As a result, over 2,100 school districts nationally are adversely impacted, in that they are unable to raise the revenue were a private sector entity to be located on the Federal property.

Oftentimes, military facilities are located on very valuable property, which would generate literally millions of dollars in local tax revenue. For those who argue, "But communities across America fight tooth and nail to keep their military bases," I would also suggest that while those are going to be kept in some districts, that the school districts within these communities will not share the sentiment when their impact aid is not equally distributed, both for civilian as well as military people who live on the base.

We simply ask to address a small inequity in what I consider to be a generally well-crafted bill. I urge support for this modest amendment.

Mr. ORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACHTLEY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman reserves his point of order.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Machtley-Orton amendment to H.R. 6. As the gentleman has indicated, this amendment would restore a portion of the impact aid funding for students whose parents are civilian employees of the Defense Department and work but do not live on Federal installations.

I would just like to note that the funding levels in this bill originally included the impact aid, so we have funded it at a greater level than would be necessary if in fact we do not include "b" impact aid. Therefore, by adopting this amendment, and I certainly hope that we can resolve this issue before final passage of the bill, but by adopting this amendment it would not take money from any other aid or for aid to any other schools or students.

Mr. Chairman, just let me indicate that in my district, I know that 2,100 schools around the country are impacted by this aid, in Utah there are 25 schools districts who receive this aid and would be faced with reductions of the tax base due to Federal ownership of property and increased civilian student enrollments attributable to the Federal activity taking place on that land.

I do believe that these students, although they do have a less dramatic impact than students of parents residing on Federal lands, there is still an impact, and civilian type "b" aid has been adjusted to take into consideration that lesser impact with a lesser subsidy.

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan reserves his point of order.

The gentleman from Utah [Mr. ORTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I will not take all of that time.

I will just say that, in closing, impact aid is the only source of revenue that the school districts have in order to make up for this loss, and unless schools have some opportunity to expand their tax base, we could see over 2,100 schools in this country losing funding, vital funding necessary to be able to stay open and provide benefits and education for these students.

Mr. Chairman, I would just urge my colleagues to support this concept. I understand that we are going to withdraw this particular amendment. Mr. Chairman, I would hope that at some point, however, we could place back into the bill the civilian type "b" impact aid as the Machtley-Orton amendment would restore.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] continues to reserve his point of order.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, even though the gentleman is going to withdraw the amendment.

I think it is important for us to understand exactly what this is. I lived impact aid. For example, I registered in the State of Illinois. When I got orders to California, I still paid Illinois State taxes. Those taxes were not forward to the State of California, so my children impacted the State of California's education system.

What I would love to do is to have, when the military shifts around, that the military would be paying the State taxes, but we cannot affect State laws, so there is a direct impact on that school district by military "a"'s and "b"'s that are moving.

On the hand of the civilian side, the civilians who live and reside in that State are paying State taxes in that State. They are paying Federal taxes, like the military does, so that there is not the impact on those particular school districts for the State taxes. Ninety-five percent of all the aid that goes to the schools is from the States.

For that, Mr. Chairman, I would go against my friend, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. MACHTLEY] and his amendment, and ask the Members not to support it in the future.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Machtley-Orton amendment. Most of my colleagues, have over the years, realized the impact that Federal installations place on our local school districts and the students they want to teach. Fortunately, Congress has remedied that Federal impact by providing funding for districts who must educate the dependents of our Federal employees. I am pleased to see that this reauthorization again compensates for these government-caused shortfalls by providing $533 million in impact aid to mitigate the lost revenue created by dependents of federally employed personnel.

Unfortunately, a misperception exists and has thus caused us to overlook an equally important segment of those previously assisted through impact aid funding. This amendment would restore impact aid for dependents of civilian employees of the Federal Government whose parents work, but do not live, on Federal property. These parents of civilian "b" students work for a variety of employers located on Federal Government property. In a normal community, these local businesses employ workers and pay property taxes to the local school district. However, these businesses located on Federal property are exempt from local property taxes and thus undercut the financial base of the local school district. The Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, for example, located in my district in Bremerton, WA, employs the parents of over 5,000 civilian "b" students, a third of the district's school students, and would lose just under $1 million in impact aid funds that have previously helped keep our local school districts operating.

Similar situations exist across the Nation as over 2,100 schools face reduced tax bases due to Federal ownership of property and increased civilian student enrollments. Although, civilian "b" students account for only 6.4 percent of the total impact aid payment or $43.2 million, that loss of funding would be detrimental to many districts unable to recoup that tax base.

I urge my colleagues acceptance of the Machtley-Orton amendment which would signal continued support of our Nation's students. We can not penalize those families who have chosen to serve their country through Federal employment nor the school districts faced with educating those federally connected students.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have to rise in opposition to the amendment, primarily because I cannot go before the Base Closing Commission and put forth an argument why they positively cannot take the New Cumberland Army Depot and Mechanicsburg Navy Depot and Army War College away from my district because it will devastate the district, and then come in and say that I also realize that I make out like a bandit on Civilian B payments under impact aid due to their presence, and, therefore, we should continue it.

So for that reason, I have to be true to my colors.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment to impact aid would expand the eligible children served under this title to include dependents of nonmilitary personnel employed on property under the jurisdiction of the uniformed services. These include children of vital personnel such as machinists, engineers, medical professionals, and other support staff that help to keep our military installations and personnel functioning at their peak capacity. These families are often as closely tied to Federal activity as military personnel; when bases close or personnel are transferred, these families are less able to contribute to the tax base of their communities. While they do contribute tax dollars from home ownership or other personal property, these revenues represent only part of the total educational budget of most local educational agencies.

Employers generally contribute a significant share of the cost of educating their employees' children, in the form of property taxes assessed by local governments. Where the Federal Government employs significant numbers of people, both military and civilian, we have an obligation to help defray the cost of educating their children. Impact aid funds have been provided to help defray these costs, but local governments cannot collect taxes from the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, there are over 8,000 civilian category B children living in my district, and over 500,000 of these children nationwide. We have restored funding for some category B children in subcommittee with the inclusion of children living in low-rent housing and military dependents in the markup. Under the current proposal, however, the third district of Virginia stands to lose over $1.3 million dollars in funds for civilian category B children. It is unfair to ask school districts to carry the weight of this burden. Let us show our support for our schools and our military by helping to ensure that dependents of civilian personnel have the same opportunities for a quality education as the children of our uniformed personnel.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, while I feel I am technically correct, and the parliamentarian has so upheld my point of order, in the interest of comity and in the interest of clearing up any misunderstandings that may have been created in dialog between the two staffs, I will both withdraw my point of order and ask that the amendment by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] be added to the Machtley amendment, and we will hopefully have a brief debate on that and then vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). The point of order of the gentleman from Michigan is withdrawn.

Mr. KILDEE. If we could join the two amendments, having the Fish amendment as an amendment to the Machtley amendment and have a discussion, then we could vote on that.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] of course would have to offer his amendment as an amendment to the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Does the gentleman from Michigan submit to the Chair a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] be allowed to offer his amendment as an amendment to the Machtley amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, before I make my unanimous consent I would ask that the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] be permitted to strike the requisite number of words and address my amendment. My intention then is to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment so that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] can then proceed.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield under his reservation, at that point if he withdraws his amendment, I want to make sure that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has the opportunity to offer his amendment, and if he cares for a vote on that, to have a vote on that. I want to do a nunc pro tunc.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] now withdraw his unanimous consent request?

Mr. KILDEE. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his request.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of Mr. MACHTLEY's amendment to add DOD civilian part B students to the list of those to be counted for impact aid.

One school system in my district is greatly impacted by the elimination of the civilian part B, Impact Aid Program in H.R. 6. Sierra Sands Unified School District, which has been negatively affected by the impact aid formula over the years, would be devastated by this proposal to eliminate category B funding.

Sierra Sands Unified School District is located in the desert community of Ridgecrest, CA, and serves the children of military and civilian personnel at the Naval Air Warfare Center, China Lake [NAWC]. In fact, over 50 percent of the district's students are dependents of NAWC-China Lake scientists, engineers, and support personnel. However, since the Navy decided to get out of the housing business in 1968 and eliminate 1,600 housing units, a majority of base personnel no longer live on base. This has resulted in the redesignation of students from category A to category B, and severe funding shortfalls in the district.

Impact aid funding for Sierra Sands has dropped from approximately 40 percent in 1974, even though a majority of their students were already category B, to under 3 percent of the district's budget due to cutbacks in category B funding.

The district's funding problems are exacerbated by the fact that the Department of Defense is still the primary employer and a significant land holder in the Ridgecrest area. Only 13 percent of the district's annual revenue is from local property tax. The district has had to rely on the State of California for additional funding in the past, but current State budget problems have forced this funding to also diminish. All of these factors have caused the district's annual per pupil funding to fall $674 over the past 2 years to only $3,473.

Because of the testing and evaluation nature of NAWC-China Lake's mission, the Ridgecrest area has one of the most highly educated populations in the United States. These scientists and engineers are particularly concerned about the education of their children. Unless Sierra Sands Unified School District receives the Federal assistance they need to offset the effect of Federal presence in the area, per pupil spending will continue to decline, much-needed physical plant maintenance will continue to be put off, and the quality of education could begin to decline. If this should occur, prospective employees could decline to move to the area and current employees could decide to move out of the area, endangering the successful completion of NAWC-China Lake's mission.

I urge the House to adopt the Machtley amendment to restore. For schools such as Sierra Sands where the only difference between them and category A districts is where personnel are housed, the elimination of part B would be greatly unfair to the students—those we wish to help.

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of California. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the gentleman's support of this amendment, as I do appreciate very much the support of other Members.

There are over 150 Members who are going to be adversely impacted should category B not be included in this impact aid.

School districts for many years have counted on this money, as they should have, because it was creating a level playing field. We have determined, in anticipation of a point of order being raised, that we would not go forward with this amendment today, but it is my hope the chairman and ranking minority member of this subcommittee would recognize there is enormous support for inclusion of category B, and that when they get to conference on this issue that they would recognize there are many Members in this House who, on a bipartisan basis, are very much concerned about providing adequate educational resources for all students.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Chairman, I would say only that we have got to be able to work out some way to continue B. I do not care what threshold screening is put upon the category B, frankly, my school district can meet any level of screening necessary, and we ought not leave these people unsupported.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Machtley amendment to extend the coverage of the Impact Aid Program to include category "B" students whose parents are military civilians. If we are truly interested in improving the educational standards of this Nation, Federal aid to compensate local communities who are financially burdened by the presence of a military facility is essential.

I do not have to tell the Members of this Chamber how important impact aid is to federally impacted school systems. As you all know, this funding is basically a reimbursement for tax revenues these communities would otherwise receive. Without this assistance, the addition of military-connected students in the classrooms would unfairly burden the entire school system. I firmly believe this is a quality-of-life issue for the children of military families who deserve to have access to a decent education.

The complete reauthorization of the Impact Aid Program should be a vital and an integral part of any effort to reform our national education system. The policy of the United States should continue to support financial assistance to school districts, either because of a loss of real property due to Federal acquisition, or because of the financial burdens placed upon them when they are responsible for educating the dependents of all people who live and, or work on military facilities.

Although we have a new administration in the White House, "B" category students continue to be ignored as relevant factors to the impact aid formula. Unfortunately, the legislation before us endorses the Clinton administration's intention to phase out "B" students from the formula by determining that military civilians are less of an impact on local communities than active duty military. That premise is simply unfounded.

Category "B" students represent 350,000 military dependents—from both civilian and active duty personnel. If the reauthorization of impact aid does not include the coverage of all "B" students, these students will become the full financial burden of local school districts, and will undoubtedly impair the quality of education offered by these elementary and secondary schools.

Mr. Chairman, I represent the Second Congressional District of Alabama which is heavily impacted by two major military installations: Air University at Maxwell Air Force Base, including the Gunter Annex, and the Army's Aviation Center at Fort Rucker.

Sixteen separate school systems in my district are impacted by these military bases, with almost 14,000 students who are federally connected—more than 13,000 are "B" category students. In fiscal year 1992, that amounted to a direct payment of almost $1.5 million. That may not seem like much here in Washington, but to those school systems in my district, it's a matter of survival. It was made very clear to me by some of the school superintendents from my district that this program represents the only Federal dollar to Alabama school systems that is not specifically earmarked, giving each school system the flexibility to manage their schools in a way that best suits their individual needs.

We talk a good deal around here about the need to improve the quality of education for our children if we want them to be able to function in this increasingly competitive and technologically demanding society in which we live. The Impact Aid Program is basic to the need of equitable funding for all school districts, and I would urge all Members to support the full reauthorization of this program. Support the Machtley amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Machtley-Orton-Scott impact aid amendment. While there are a number of wealthy school districts that will not suffer from the deletion of a substantial part of their Federal impact aid money, this across the board cut of allowances for students of nonmilitary parents who work on Federal installations would deal a devastating blow to the budgets of financially strapped schools in my district and in others throughout the Nation.

In my district 16 school districts receive impact aid funds. Three of these school systems currently receive approximately $630,000 in impact aid funds for civilian "B" students. One system is the 11 largest system in the State, but the lowest per-student funding in the State. The loss of these federal funds will work real hardships on education in these schools. As the result of closures of other military facilities, the Naval aviation Depot in Cherry Point, in my district is expected to employ another 1,100 civilian employees within the next year, causing a severe Federal impact on the local school system in years to come.

The compensatory funds provided for civilian "B" impact aid student are vital to the curricula of these schools.

Mr. Chairman, if there are wealthy districts that use the civilian "B" category funds as gravy, then perhaps it is time to means test this program. It is unfair to cut funding that is desperately needed just to maintain the status quo in poorer, severely impacted districts. If there are justifiable cuts, they should be made on a district-by-district basis, but don't throw out the baby with the bathwater.

The civilian "B's" have been targeted year after year, and better sense has prevailed to restore them. It would be ironic if this administration—with its ambitious educational goals—should be the one to succeed in wrecking a program that has been successful and fair in North Carolina and has never suffered any taint of scandal or misuse.

I ask my colleagues to restore this funding.

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FISH

"(A) the amount such agency is entitled to receive under subsection (b) for such fiscal year; and

Page , strike line and all that follows through line (subsection (a) of section 8013) and insert the following:

"(a) PAYMENTS FOR FEDERAL ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of making payments under section 8003 (except subsection (e) of such section), there are authorized to be appropriated $16,750,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999.

"(2) PAYMENTS FOR HEAVILY IMPACTED LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—For the purpose of making payments under section 8003(e), there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999.

Mr. FISH (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that I know there are several problems throughout the country on impact aid, and I cannot say 100 percent sure we have addressed all of them in this bill.

For that reason, I would be most happy to have a hearing just on those districts that feel that they have not been treated as fairly as they could be, and would be most happy to have you be the leadoff witness on that hearing. Other people have come to me with some problems.

We have worked very, very hard to try to wrestle with the problems of impact aid within the Federal budget and the Federal deficit, but I recognize that nothing is perfect. So I would hope to have hearings very soon just on that issue and have you certainly lead off as a witness to bring to the committee the special needs you may have in your district.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise again in support of the Fish amendment, as I indicated earlier. I want to commend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] for permitting this amendment to go forward and withdrawing his point of order. I am also very much impressed with the gentleman's willingness to have his committee conduct hearings on the need for impact aid.

For as long as I have been in Congress, and that has been a number of years, the impact aid problem has become an annual, a perennial problem, only because we have never developed a satisfactory formula to help these impacted school districts. When there is a township, like we have in our own area, in New York's Hudson Valley, affecting both the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and my area in the Hudson River Valley where the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, along with the Palisades Park Commission, takes up over 9 percent of the taxable property, leaving less than 10 percent of taxable property burdening the taxpayers in trying to finance their school district. We have a serious problem, and that is not just unique to our own area in New York State. This problem exists in regions throughout our Nation.

Accordingly, I hope your proposed committee hearings will not be limited to just those few districts that are impacted but will try to develop an equitable, reasonable formula for helping all those school districts burdened by nontaxable Federal lands.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague.

Mr. Chairman, I previously spoke on this amendment and the need for it because of the underfunding of section 2 and the problem we have created by the Federal Government taking lands from school districts.

I appreciate very much what the chairman has said with respect to allowing this to go forward and that he promises to have hearings on this very important issue, because we simply cannot walk away from this.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. KILDEE) there were—ayes 6, noes 8.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to title VIII?

If not, the clerk will designate title IX.

"(1) waive the requirements of that section for such agency or consortium; and

"(2) arrange for the provision of equitable services to such children, teachers, or other educational personnel through arrangements that shall be subject to the requirements of this section and of sections 9503, 9505, and 9506.

"(B) Pending final resolution of any investigation or complaint that could result in a determination under this section, the Secretary may withhold from the allocation of the affected State or local educational agency the amount estimated by the Secretary to be necessary to pay the cost of those services.

"(2)(A) If such affected agency or consortium is dissatisfied with the Secretary's final action after a proceeding under paragraph (1), it may, within 60 days after notice of such action, file with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such State is located a petition for review of that action.

"(B) A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Secretary.

"(C) The Secretary thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary based this action, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(d) PRIOR DETERMINATION.—Any by-pass determination by the Secretary under this Act as in effect on the day before enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994 shall remain in effect to the extent the Secretary determines that it is consistent with the purpose of this section.

"(b) POLICY CONTENT.—The content of such policy may include—

"(1) punishment requirements for possession and use of a gun on school property, including expulsion and suspension;

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there amendments to title IX?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. WOOLSEY

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. WOOLSEY: To Title IX, on p. 763, add a new Part G.

After line 3 add "Part G—Sense of the Congress to Increase the Total Share of Federal Spending on Education".

The Congress finds that—

(1) in order to increase our Nation's standard of living and to increase the number of good jobs, the United States must increase its productivity and ability to compete in the international marketplace by improving the educational level of our workforce;

(2) although efforts are being made to establish higher educational standards and goals, there is a substantial shortage of resources to meet such standards and goals;

(3) States and local communities are finding it increasingly difficult to meet even higher educational standards and goals, and States will not be able to fund needed changes without Federal help to reach such standards and goals;

(4) the Federal Government has established many education programs but failed to provide adequate funding for such programs, for example one such program provides education to our Nation's disabled students and was established with a promise of 40 percent Federal funding but currently receives only 8 percent Federal funding;

(5) the annual shortfall in Federal education programs is approximately half of the promised funding:

(6) many needed education improvements will not need Federal funds, however, other suggested changes such as lengthened school years, better pay, after-school activities, mentoring for students at risk, programs for gifted students, and replacing substandard buildings will require substantial Federal assistance; and

(7) the Federal contribution to education is less than 2 percent of the total Federal budget, and in order to make education a national priority, the total percentage of Federal education funding should be increased by 1 percent each year over the next 8 years to reach 10 percent of the total Federal budget.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that the total share of the Federal spending on education should increase by at least 1 percent each year until such share reaches 10 percent of the total Federal budget.

Ms. WOOLSEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a sense of the Congress resolution to increase the total share of Federal spending on education by 1 percent of spending each year until total education spending equals 10 percent of the Federal budget.

Ten years ago, the National Commission on Excellence in Education published a landmark report on education in America titled, "A Nation at Risk." That report said, "Our Nation is at Risk." And, that our educational performance is "being eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity that threatens our very future as a Nation, and, a people."

That report was right, Mr. Chairman. In a 1992 study conducted by the Department of Education, eighth grade students in the United States ranked 13th out of 14 nations in mathematics proficiency, and 12th out of 14 in science proficiency.

Today, the education budget makes up 2 percent of total Federal spending. If we are truly committed to our children's future—this country's future—we must do better by backing up that commitment with increased Federal funding.

How would we spend these funds? We have heard alot of talk about unfunded Federal mandates while debating this bill. The increase I am proposing would fully fund all currently existing Federal education mandates: We could extend successful education programs to all eligible students; we could increase participation in Head Start and Chapter I programs; we could ensure that every eligible student received his or her full Pell grant; we could support violence and drug prevention programs, adult literacy programs, and repair unsafe school buildings.

And you know what? By increasing our investment in education, we will save money in the long run, because more Americans will be trained for the jobs of the future; health care costs will be reduced; there will be less dependence on welfare; and decreased crime and violence.

As a member of the House Budget Committee, I am particularly aware of the need for more funds for education. Along with other members of the Budget Committee, I spent the last week fighting to make funds for education a higher budget priority.

This sense of the Congress resolution will give needed support to members of both the Budget and the Appropriations Committees who want to increase the share of Federal funds that go to education. It also sends a clear message that this Congress values education.

Mr. Chairman, this sense of the Congress resolution has already been passed by the other body, and I ask my colleagues to join with our colleagues in the other body to unite Congress in a commitment to improving education in America.

□ 1810

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I realize this is just a sense-of-the-Congress amendment and not a mandate, but it really does not make a lot of sense to try to create false expectations that we are going to spend a lot more money out of our Federal budget on education. We just do not have the money.

I recognize that education is very important, so important because it is the cause of violence, crime, health care problems, teen pregnancy, and it means so much. But the problem is we only have so much money.

Last week we spent 2 days debating the balanced budget amendment, which unfortunately was defeated. We had a majority of the House that supported it. We want to get serious.

I am on the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Education and Labor, and I recognize the need for the money in education. But if you do not have the money, you do not have the money.

We are talking about $150 billion if we use today's budget. We are spending approximately $30 billion now. To go to $150 billion under pay-go, how do you get to that number?

The other assumption that is made is that throwing money at education on the Federal level solves the problem. Education, in my opinion, belongs to the family, the State and local levels; it is not a Federal money issue. We just cannot throw money. Let us not try to create a false impression that we are going to come up with another $100 billion-some when the money is not there. And we cannot get it under the pay-go rule, and where do we cut to get that money?

I oppose the sense-of-Congress amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to title IX?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAM JOHNSON OF TEXAS

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. This amendment was printed on page 2776 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas: Page 762, after line 8, insert the following:

"SEC. 9508. PROHIBITION AGAINST FUNDS FOR PROTECTED PRAYER.

"Notwithstanding any provision of law, no funds made available through the Department of Education under this Act, or any other Act, shall be available to any State or local educational agency which has a policy of denying or which effectively prevents participation in, constitutionally protected prayer in public schools by individuals on a voluntary basis. Neither the United States nor any State nor any local educational agency shall require any person to participate in prayer or influence the form or content of any constitutionally protected prayer in such public schools.".

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would allow students and teachers in public schools across the Nation to voluntarily pray. My amendment is identical to the language offered February 23 by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN]. In fact, it is Mr. DUNCAN's language which was overwhelmingly supported by the Members of this body by a margin of 367 to 55.

As you will remember, the House voted to instruct conferees on Goals 2000 to accept a Senate amendment of the same language which I am offering now. The other body passed this same language by a steadfast 75-to-22 vote. Judging by these margins, this Congress supports protecting the constitutional right of children to pray.

Let me just tell you a couple of stories. One, which is out of St. Louis, where kids were in school and one of them, a 10-year-old boy, was praying before eating his lunch on three separate occasions. Finally, he was disciplined with detention during recreation periods for 1 week.

The boy's mother was told that it was against the law to pray in school and that the decision to punish her son would not be overturned. That is not America. That is not what this country was built on. This country is one Nation under God, and prayer is part of our legal right.

The Congress, this Congress, will not tolerate abridgement of this right, nor discrimination against those who would seek to exercise it. There is no better time than today on this bill for Congress to take action to protect the constitutional right to freely practice one's religion.

When I was in school, participation in religious programs, the Pledge of Allegiance, pregame prayers, were every day occurrences. In fact, the Ten Commandments were posted on the walls.

I think even today right here in Washington, DC, we see that coming back when Marion Barry, who used to be the mayor and is currently a councilman, said, "With all the violence and other problems, we need to get back to trying to allow those who want to pray to do it." Barry said, referring to shootings and beatings in the schools, "It may set a moral tone at the schools." That is out of the paper. You all read it. I think you realize, and so does the rest of the country, finally, realizing that it is time to get prayer back to school.

When I took my oath of office, I pledged to uphold the Constitution just like every Member of this body, and that is what we would do today by passing this amendment.

The courts have affirmed that students in public schools do not shed their constitutional right to freedom of speech or expression at the school gatehouse. That is from Wallace versus Jeffrey.

The court concluded that there is no constitutional barrier to a State protecting every student's right to engage in voluntary prayer.

It does not require State education agencies or local education agencies to do anything except uphold our Constitution. An abiding belief in and a love of God were the building blocks of our Founding Fathers. That laid the foundation for this wonderful Nation. This Nation's heritage is rooted in religious faith.

I believe those same values have helped to maintain its strength.

Over 200 years ago, George Washington affirmed this belief when he stated, "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." And I believe that the omission of voluntary prayer in school removes from children the very values on which this great Nation was founded.

The right to voluntary prayer is vital to the future of our children and this Nation. I think we need to put this amendment on this bill just to uphold that right.

By voting for this amendment today, you would be casting a vote to uphold the U.S. Constitution; you are fighting discrimination against voluntary prayer, but above all you are allowing our children, who are the future of our Nation, the freedom to pray.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON].

Mr. Chairman, I probably prayed every day of my life since I was 3 years old, which goes back about 60 years, and I commend it to everyone. I think it is very good, and I know that there are sometimes some overzealous teachers or some overzealous administrators who are uninformed and really interfere with private prayer. When I taught in public school, that was not the case then, and in most public schools it is not the case now, but there are some occasions where there is interference.

In a school cafeteria when I was on cafeteria duty, Mr. Chairman, I would see students sometimes bowing their heads before they began to eat, or making the sign of the cross, giving some religious indication, privately before they began to eat, and I certainly feel that is protected prayer. That is their own voluntary prayer.

I looked at the language. I think the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] has some language that might be acceptable to the gentleman that is probably a little briefer but still achieves the same purpose, so I would ask us to take a look at the amendment to the gentleman's amendment which Mr. WILLIAMS may offer.

But I certainly agree, Mr. Chairman, that there are instances where people are interfered with in their constitutional right of privately praying.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WILLIAMS TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAM JOHNSON OF TEXAS

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS to the amendment offered by Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas: In section 9508, as proposed to be added by the amendment—

(1) in the heading, strike "PROHIBITION AGAINST"; and

(2) in the text, strike "Notwithstanding" and all that follows through "in such", and insert the following:

"No funds authorized to be appropriated under this Act may be used by any State or local educational agency to adopt policies that prevent voluntary prayer and medication in".

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to draw my colleagues' attention to the fact that the gentleman from Texas offers a serious amendment about which he and many people in this Chamber and around this country have considered for many years now, and that is the appropriate and proper way to allow America's school children a moment of contemplation in which they might pray in school, if they so choose and do so in a way that does not violate the Constitution of the United States. I thank my gentleman friend for raising this issue before the House.

I do hold, however, that my colleague's amendment, although it does not intend to, would, in fact, unfairly punish schools with a drastic penalty; that is, the loss of every dime of their Elementary and Secondary Education Act money, and it would penalize them simply if a school official guessed wrong about what prayer is constitutionally acceptable and what prayer is not.

Now we all understand that this is an exceedingly complex and unsettled area of law. It is far from clear, both to the Members of this body, as well, of course, to all school officials in the land, as to what is constitutionally protected prayer. The law in this area continues to evolve, and there are flatly contradictory opinions and decisions from the Federal courts about voluntary prayer in the public schools, and yet the amendment offered by my friend from Texas would ask people who are trained as teachers to make these difficult, complex constitutional decisions, and, if they decided wrong in the opinion of an all-powerful and omnipotent Federal Government, then every child under their charge, every child in that school district, would lose every dime of money envisioned in this bill.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am simply trying to perfect what I think is an alarmingly flawed amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON]. My perfecting amendment does not take us down the path I have described. What my amendment does is, I think, very simple. It does protect two important principles. First, it upholds our time-honored tradition of local control of schools; and, second, it supports voluntary prayer.

By the way, Mr. Chairman, it keeps the Federal Government out of the business of telling local schools what they must do and how they must do it while making it clear that no Federal funds, and this is the heart of my amendment, no Federal funds may be used to prevent voluntary prayer and meditation in our public schools. So, my amendment says, "You simply can't use any Federal funds under this act to prevent school prayer," but it does not threaten students with the elimination of every dime of Federal money. It just says, "You can't use Federal funds to deny someone the chance to engage in voluntary prayer and meditation."

Mr. Chairman, let me spend another minute or so talking to my colleagues about what I think the unintended consequences are of the Johnson-Duncan amendment. First, as it is now drafted, Mr. Chairman, the amendment places significant Federal control over some fundamental local school matters. Does this Chamber really want to empower Federal officials to review local school decisionmaking concerning the disposition of State and local education dollars?

Equally disturbing, Mr. Chairman, is that these Federal officials would be authorized under the gentleman's amendment to pronounce upon issues of constitutional law and to terminate all support, financial support, to a school district if the Federal officials disagree with the local decision that the local administrators have made. I ask, "Isn't that the reverse of what my friends on the other side of the aisle say they are for?" They want the Federal Government out of it, and here they are going to empower the Federal Government to come in and tell a local official they were wrong and, not only they were wrong, but we have now stripped every dime of the money in this act from every child in that school district.

Mr. Chairman, that is an arrogant use of Federal authority over the local decisionmaking power of the schools. Why would our colleagues on the other side of the aisle want to empower Federal officials?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). The time of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an additional 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, let me just withdraw my objection. I would like to listen to the gentleman, but I would just like to be able to ask him some questions before he is done.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON] withdraws his objection.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON] withdrawing his objection.

Mr. Chairman, the point is that the gentleman's amendment, as I understand it, is trying to help local school children, but what he is really doing is empowering Federal officials to walk into our school districts, decide whether or not our local officials are correct when they make a decision over a child's personal decision regarding prayer. Federal officials can come in and decide whether that local official's decision about that personal time that a child may or may not want to spend with his or her God is the right decision, and, if a Federal official decides it is not right, they can strip that school of all their money.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues in a thoughtful way to consider this:

Wouldn't this amendment, as offered by my friend from Texas, risk dividing communities and encouraging costly litigation?

□ 1830

You are a Federal school official. You wake up in the morning and what you really want to do is go administer the schools, or maybe even teach a couple of classes. But what you are faced with is a memo from the American Center for Law and Justice taking one side of the school prayer issue, and another memo on your desk from the American Civil Liberties Union or the National Education Association taking another side of the complex evolving school prayer issue.

All you want to do is teach the children. But because the Johnson-Duncan amendment passed the Congress a few months earlier, you must now make a decision in this terribly complex and personal area as to how the children can best pray according to the Constitution.

As soon as you make that decision, are you not going to divide the community of parents and children within that district? And are you not going to invite litigation? Absolutely, and every Member of this Chamber knows it.

Let us not put that burden on our local school officials. Let us not put that burden on our teachers. Let us simply say to them, school officials, teachers, you cannot use a dime of this money in this bill to deny constitutionally protected prayer by your students in your schools. That is what my amendment would do.

Mr. Chairman, now I yield to my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON].

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I just want to tell Members that the Supreme Court, first of all, says it is unconstitutional to deny a student the right to pray. According to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], the gentleman wants to not have the Federal Government get involved because he says it is not unconstitutional for a student to pray.

I say the gentleman is wrong. I cannot believe that the gentleman would try to say, it is kind of humorous at best, that allowing a child to pray on his own accord is a Federal mandate. The Johnson-Duncan amendment does not do anything that requires a school to do anything. All it says is they must not prevent a constitutional right to pray.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] has expired.

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think what you have got to look at is the language in the amendment. The language in the amendment strikes the whole Duncan-Johnson amendment, the whole thing. It strikes the words prohibition against protected prayer. It strikes constitutionally protected prayer in public schools voluntarily. Nothing is left that protects prayer in school.

I think it is also interesting to note that in 1989 the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] voted against a school prayer amendment passed by a margin of 269 to 135. Clearly the gentleman has created for himself a problem of conflicting votes on the issue of voluntary prayer in school, trying to raise just another issue, that of Federal mandates.

To begin with, this whole bill is a Federal mandate of pretty large degree. I think since we understand now that it does not perfect the amendment, it guts the entire language, it is creating a giant loophole for schools to violate the Constitution, not uphold it. I still say it is our constitutional right in this Congress to protect the Constitution as written, and this language in our bill will do it, not the amendment that is on hand. I suggest Members vote against it.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is saying the Federal Government should have a role in protecting the constitutional rights of freedom of religion of the students of this country?

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. I say we should, and I think the gentleman trying to amend our amendment is taking that constitutional authority away from the Congress.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, your position is basically that the Federal Government, by coming in to the local schools to protect students' right to pray, is something that the Federal Government should be responsible for, protecting the constitutional rights of peoples' rights to the freedom to pray and the freedom of religion.

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Exactly.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. The gentleman is saying our friend's amendment actually guts your intention of having the Federal Government protect this constitutional right and make that one of its responsibilities?

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Precisely.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to pose a question to the author of the amendment, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], if he is so inclined to answer the question.

Mr. Chairman, is it my understanding the gentleman from Montana's intent is to place the educational system in a situation where it does not have to pass judgment upon whether a particular activity is constitutional or not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, it is impossible to craft a law that would remove that dilemma from officials. It seems to me that every official that attempts to find their way through the Constitution to allow voluntary prayer is in a briar patch, and I do not know how to craft a law to prevent that dilemma.

What I am trying to do is stop Federal officials from forcing that dilemma.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, is that inconsistent with the vote of the gentleman from Montana when he voted for Mr. DUNCAN's language in February on Goals 2000?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman would remind me what the vote was?

Mr. MANZULLO. That is on the amendment that is present now, the Johnson-Duncan amendment that is present now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Montana was incorrect and cast a bad vote.

Mr. MANZULLO. I would like to ask another question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As did, unfortunately, a majority of the House and Senate.

Mr. MANZULLO. We all make mistakes.

Mr. Chairman, my understanding, again, is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] is saying the schools should now be placed in a position of determining what is or what is not constitutional with regard to the activities of children, is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will yield further, I could teach that one round or flat, I guess.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the answer, I am sorry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman rephrase his question?

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the reason for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] is that the gentleman does not feel that school authorities, including teachers, should be placed in the position of determining whether or not a certain activity is constitutional. Is that the purpose of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the purpose of my amendment is to deny any school official from using the money in this act to deny constitutionally permitted voluntary prayer.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, that did not answer the question of this speaker here. Let me rephrase that.

Do schools have to make decisions from time to time as to whether or not a particular conduct is permissible, either under the general, at that time, statutory law, or under the Constitution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They do.

Mr. MANZULLO. And my understanding of the amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] is the schools would have a ready forum in the event a question arises, so instead of being barraged by letters from both sides, they could have a quick forum in the Federal courts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, if I may, let me answer the question by asking the gentleman a question. What if the schools guess wrong? The gentleman is asking whether or not the schools have to guess. I am saying, yes, they have to guess. What if they guessed wrong under the gentleman's amendment?

If they are going to be litigated against, they are going to be sued. The community is going to be divided. If they guessed wrong, the Federal Government is going to deny every dime of money under this act. Does the gentleman support that?

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, this gentleman is opposed to Federal restrictions on schools that place schools and all local government entities in that particular position.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not answer my question.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, the issue here is very simple. As I understand the Johnson-Duncan amendment, it simply says that if a school receives Federal funds that it should, as part of its tutorial role, ensure that students have the full range of constitutional rights. There are all kinds of issues that come up, for example, dress codes, the manner in which students can publish newspapers, that went to the Supreme Court. And teachers and schools deal on a day-to-day basis with the rights of students.

My understanding of the Johnson-Duncan law is, all it says is that students are entitled to constitutional rights and, to the extent that schools are receiving Federal funding, they should be guarding the constitutional rights of those children.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas and in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Montana. This amendment incorporates the same language passed last week by the House as a motion to instruct conferees on Goals 2000 legislation that I offered along with Congressman DUNCAN from Tennessee. In addition, it is similar to the one recently passed by the Senate concerning school prayer. The amendment offered by Senator HELMS overwhelmingly passed the Senate by a vote of 77–23. I think it is important to note that an almost identical amendment to this one was passed by the House of Representatives in 1989 by a vote of 269 to 135—almost a 2-to-1 margin.

First, let me spell out what this language does do and then make it clear what it doesn't do. This language will prevent any school district which has a policy of prohibiting voluntary student-initiated prayer in the schools from receiving any Federal funds authorized by this act or any other act. In other words, it simply forbids school districts from setting up official policies or procedures with the intent and purpose of prohibiting individuals from voluntarily saying prayers at school.

This language does not mandate school prayer or require schools to write any particular prayer. Under this language, a school is not required to do anything in favor of voluntary prayer. It simply must refrain from instituting policies prohibiting voluntary student prayer.

The Founding Fathers intended religion to provide a moral anchor for our democracy. Wouldn't they be puzzled to return to modern-day America and find, among elite circles in academia and the media, a scorn for the public expression of religious values.

One of the many liberties our forefathers founded this great Nation upon was freedom of religion; a freedom to pray to the God we want, when we want, and where we want. Unfortunately, this freedom has been eroded by the Supreme Court over the last few decades. I firmly believe that no one should be forced to pray, especially if a certain prayer is contrary to an individual's beliefs. But, there can be no question that every American citizen has the right to pray voluntarily whenever and wherever he or she chooses, and that includes children in public schools. This is protected under the first amendment; "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." It is that second part that I ask you to pay special attention to today.

As President Reagan so eloquently stated in 1982, "the first amendment of the Constitution was not written to protect the people of this country from religious values; it was written to protect religious values from government tyranny." I urge you to vote for the Johnson amendment.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana. Let us understand what we are not voting on today. We are not voting on the right of students to pray in school.

That right is protected by our Constitution and is respected in our schools. Any child who wants to say a prayer before the day begins or recite a blessing before a meal at school or seek divine intervention before an exam is free to do so.

The Williams substitute would ensure that that right will remain protected. It will ensure that no Federal funds can be used to prohibit constitutionally permitted voluntary school prayer.

Moreover, there is no reported case in our courts in the history of the Republic involving school officials refusing to allow private voluntary prayers by individual students. And this practice goes on all the time.

As William Safire, the noted advisor to President Nixon once observed, so long as there are math tests, there will be prayer in schools.

The gentleman's amendment would protect the taxpayers in our school districts from defending nuisance lawsuits and from the threat of losing all federal education aid.

What does the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas really do? It would, by applying Draconian penalties to only one side of the church-state debate, effectively encourage schools and schools boards to violate the rights of all students to be free from the coercive effects of government-sponsored religious practices. It would make school boards feel vulnerable to the threats of lawsuits from the most unreasonable person in the community.

It would give to some Federal bureaucrat in the local office of the Department of Education the right to decide in his or her own volition that the policy of the local school board is inadequate and all the Federal aid ought to be cut off, and then the school board would have to go sue in Federal court to restore the Federal aid. What a one-sided threat that is.

What the proponents of officially sponsored prayer, and make no mistake about it, that is what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas would lead to, officially sponsored prayer, ignore is that the establishment clause exists to protect religious liberty. It is difficult to understand why some of the same Members who do not trust the machinery of state to regulate railroad tariffs nonetheless seem perfectly at ease with the possibility that local bureaucrats would be involved in school prayer decisions.

For religion to be truly free, it must flow from individual faith, not from government coercion.

The Williams substitute will protect that most precious of our liberties without threatening to bankrupt our local schools or permit the enemies of religious freedom to use the courts and the schools to coerce the religious practices of our children.

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] is in the tradition of Roger Williams.

I urge adoption of the Williams substitute.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NADLER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, what is it that leaves the gentleman, the gentleman said that this proposal is leading to officially, an official prayer, something, officially-sanctioned prayer, what leads the gentleman to the conclusion that someone who has stated over and over again that what he is really concerned about is protecting the rights of students to exercise their own right of voluntary prayer, that that leads to officially-sanctioned prayer, protecting people's right to pray as they so choose?

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I note two things in answer to the question. Number one, the right of voluntary school prayer is not threatened. There is no case on record in the courts of this country that has ever stopped voluntary school prayer, number one, so there is no threat there.

And I note, secondly, that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas would threaten a local school district, would give the power to a local bureaucrat to determine in his opinion that the policy of a local school district is not sufficiently protective of his opinion of the constitutional right, let that bureaucrat cut off the Federal aid, and that would be a heck of an incentive to local school districts to lean over backward in favor of officially sponsored prayer.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, before I start to present my support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN], I would like to compliment the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], who candidly admitted he thought he had made a mistake on this vote. We rarely hear that kind of candor here on the House floor, so I wanted to compliment the gentleman, and also have him think carefully about his amendment today, that he might perhaps be wrong again.

Mr. Chairman, the language of the Johnson amendment has been accepted overwhelmingly by both the House and the Senate with regards to constitutionally protected school prayer. As recently as February 23, this House voted 367 to 55 in favor of identical language for the Education legislation.

Apparently, for the opponents of the Johnson amendment, constitutionally-protected prayer ranks low on the list of constitutional freedoms, and local schools should have broad discretion to limit the exercise of that right. The only protection they would like to place against local school systems infringing on that right is that schools cannot use funds provided in this bill to do so.

What I am concerned about is that the small constitutional protection that has been carved out for our children must be protected by all persons who are concerned with the protection of civil liberties. The violation of these rights should not be responded to with a slap on the wrist. We should bring the full force of the law to see that these protections are maintained.

The Supreme Court has been very strict in drawing a line between voluntary and involuntary prayer. And, once again, let me say this amendment affects only constitutionally protected prayer—only the right to say grace before a meal, a silent prayer in the morning or a voluntary student-led invocation at graduation.

This House has stood firmly for that principle in the past and again this year. We should not dilute that message with the Williams amendment.

I ask my colleagues to vote no on the Williams amendment and yes on the amendment offered by my good friend, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN]. Back in 1963 when the Supreme Court outlawed compulsory religious services, that is what we are talking about, in the public schools, there was a lot of compulsory religious services all over this Nation.

The Supreme Court found that terribly sad things were happening, children of different religions were going through horrible experiences in portions of the country, well, we will say in Mormon country, where most of the children happen to be Mormons and the prayers always followed that religion, and in Baptist country, and in Catholic areas, and so forth. So the children who were not of that denomination, who did not believe that, children were hurt and humiliated by the fact that prayers were being held in religions other than theirs and which they might have strongly disagreed with.

Really, it was a very controversial decision of the Supreme Court based on the First Amendment that says that the Government is supposed to stay out of religion. It must stay out. It cannot support, it cannot demand, it cannot countenance compulsory religious services in schools.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt, absolutely, no doubt, that freedom of prayer is protected in schools. A child in a public school can pray, can read the Bible, all in his or her free time. They cannot interrupt classes and things to do that.

Behind this, behind this amendment, too, is a campaign being waged by the radical right, the born again, to some extent conservative religious people who are determined to get public schools with compulsory religious services, religious prayer. That is what is behind this.

Mr. Chairman, there is one case out there that sort of triggered it. In the first place, in 1992 it infuriated these people that the Supreme Court would not allow or outlawed as unconstitutional a prayer at a graduation. They were right, it was compulsory, because it was done by majority vote, we will say by the students, but majority vote is not necessarily constitutional. The purpose of the Constitution is generally to protect the minority, the person who is to be destroyed or humiliated by the majority, the minority.

Then there was a case in one circuit, one court, that held that where the students got together and voluntarily, absolutely with no adult or church supervision, wanted to have a prayer, that that was all right. That is the only case there is. The Supreme Court has never countenanced anything like this, and I do not think they will.

This is what they have grasped. They want to get the camel's nose under the tent, because what they want and what a lot of my colleagues that I respect want is compulsory school prayer. They want, as President Reagan used to say over and over again, "What about our little children? They are not allowed to pray in schools," and so forth.

Let me tell my colleagues, children can pray in public schools any time they want to. Nobody is threatening the right of children to pray. What we cannot countenance, though, is to have compulsory prayer, and that is really what they are talking about.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, what about just last year in Corpus Christi, students at various high schools and junior highs were offered by school officials in Corpus Christi, TX, to disperse, and were advised that they would receive disciplinary action for gathering before school to pray around a flag pole?

What about in Dallas, where students at Skyline High School were threatened by their principal that if they continued to read audibly from their Bible and pray on the school lawn before school, they would receive disciplinary action?

We could give case by case by case, maybe not legal cases, because these people cannot afford to go through the gentleman's system, but with the Johnson amendment they would be protected from this kind of abuse by school officials.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. EDWARDS of California was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not think they would be protected. What the gentleman wants is compulsory. The gentleman wants there to be compulsory prayer in schools. Is that not correct? I would ask the gentleman, is that what he really wants?

Mr. DELAY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, that is not correct. We do not want to discourage those who want to practice religions on school grounds from doing so.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. They can practice it anytime they want.

Mr. DELAY. It has nothing to do with compulsory religion.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, advocates for school prayer want us to believe that without the Johnson-Duncan amendment children would be denied the opportunity to pray in school. This is simply not true and that kind of inflammatory rhetoric should be rejected by the Members of this body. Before casting a vote on this issue, everyone should know what is really happening in our schools.

The Johnson-Duncan amendment appears to support voluntary, constitutionally permissible school prayer. If that is all proponents of this amendment want, they should be aware that truly voluntary prayer is permissible under current law. Students may read the Bible during their free time, as well as pray voluntarily and silently anytime they desire. No school system has tried to deny a student this right. Therefore, if voluntary prayer is permissible, what do proponents of this amendment really want? I believe the real motivation behind this amendment is the reinstatement of compulsory prayer in the public schools. We simply cannot allow that to happen.

The problems currently plaguing schools have been constant and deeply troubling. Armed with misrepresentations of the law and one lower court case, the religious right has sent out self-described SWAT teams to put prayer back in the schools. Letters were sent to public school officials around the country advising them on ways to circumvent a 1992 Supreme Court ruling banning school-sponsored graduation prayers. One fundamentalist leader has suggested that teachers "get [their] Christian students, get them to speak out" during class. In Jackson, MS, 490 students—a bare 54 percent—voted for prayer and the school principal allowed the student body president to read a prayer over the loudspeaker. Ironically, all of this has been done in the name of voluntary prayer. If this amendment passes, these problems will only increase.

The Johnson-Duncan amendment would only serve to confuse public school administrators and subject public schools to the threat of being sued or losing their Federal funds. The bottom line is that the Federal courts are split—a minority of one favors student-led and initiated prayer—and the Supreme Court has not spoken. Yet this amendment would force school administrators to determine what constitutes voluntary prayer and where and when it is permissible during the school day. We simply cannot put school principals in that precarious position, particularly since the funds used to educate our children are at risk.

I urge Members to vote against the Johnson-Duncan amendment as it is currently written and support the Williams amendment.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. Mr. Chairman, I think the motives and intent of my colleague, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], are honorable, but I am not sure, frankly, that it is necessary. If I read and understand the Johnson amendment correctly, I think it is an amendment which we, frankly, can support.

Those who know my record here know that I am not one who believes in the mixture of church and state, but I would like the Members to listen to both the amendment and then to the American Law Division's definition of what is constitutionally protected prayer in the schools.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] says that no funds shall be available to any State or local education agency which has a policy of denying or effectively preventing participation. That tells me that we are not going to have quite the concerns that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] raises; that, very frankly, you have to have on the books as a State education agency or local education agency an effective policy and procedure saying, "If you do this or this, we are not going to allow it in this particular school."

There is not a school in this country that does not have a policies and procedures book, so I think we are going to know up front exactly what we are talking about in this area.

Let me read from what the American Law Division has to say about constitutionally protected prayer, because I think that is the issue that many of us have struggled with. They suggest, and now I am quoting,

> The Supreme Court has held in a number of decisions that government sponsorship of devotional activities in the public schools violates the establishment of religion clause of the First Amendment. With respect to prayer in the public schools, it has held the constitutional prohibition of government sponsorship and promotion to apply (1) regardless of whether the prayer is composed by the State, is taken from religious literature, or is composed by a teacher or student; (2) regardless of whether students can be excused from participating; and (3) to both regular devotional activities during the school day and to prayers at such singular events as graduation exercises. The proscription has even been held to extend to moments of silence in the public schools where the State has prescribed that the moments are to be used for prayer.
> None of these prayer activities, in other words, are constitutionally protected; and SEA or LEA policies or actions to prevent students and teachers from engaging in such activities, thus, would not, or should not, trigger the cutoff of funds under the Helms-Lott amendment.
> But while the Court has been clear in holding government to be barred by the establishment clause from sponsoring or promoting prayer in the public schools, it has had less occasion to address the converse issue of what prayer activities must be allowed in the public schools, i.e., what prayer activities might be considered to be "constitutionally protected." In general the Court has affirmed that students in public schools do not "shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate"; but it has also made clear that the "First Amendment rights of students in the public schools 'are not automatically coextensive with the rights of adults in other settings' and must be 'applied in light of the special characteristics of the school environment.'" Yet specific rulings illuminating the parameters of those generalities and, consequently, the scope of the standard articulated in the Helms-Lott amendment are few. One can surmise, for instance, that it would violate both the free speech and free exercise clauses of the First Amendment for a SEA or LEA to forbid a student from praying silently during the school day or, perhaps, even from praying aloud, at least so long as the prayer activity was not disruptive of the school environment and did not connote school endorsement. But our research has found no case directly on point.
> Other areas involving prayer in the public schools have more decisional authority, but the parameters of what is constitutionally protected or mandated or permissible have not been fully defined. For instance, the Court has indicated in dicta that it would be constitutionally permissible for a State to provide for a moment of silence in the public schools that could be used by students, inter alia, for voluntary prayer. But in the one case in which it considered the issue, it struck down the specific silent prayer or meditation statute that was before it on the grounds the State adopted the statute to promote prayer; and it has so far chosen not to address the issue again. The one subsequent lower Federal court decision also struck down a particular moment of silence statute. Thus, although it seems possible for a constitutional policy relating to moments of silence to be articulated, the courts have not as yet provided certain guidance.
> Some degree of uncertainty about what is constitutionally protected also attends the issue of commencement prayer. In Lee v. Weisman, supra, the Supreme Court held school-initiated and clergy-delivered prayer at a public secondary school's commencement ceremony to be unconstitutional. Subsequently, however, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, as well as a Federal district court in Idaho, differentiated student-initiated and student-delivered prayer at a public secondary school's commencement ceremony and held that kind of commencement prayer to be constitutional. The Supreme Court chose not to review the Fifth Circuit's decision, despite the fact that analogous decisions involving school prayer suggested it might not be correct. Thus, student-initiated prayer at commencement ceremonies might for now be considered to be constitutionally protected in the jurisdiction of the Fifth Circuit and in Idaho, but its status elsewhere, as well as its ultimate constitutional status in the Fifth Circuit and Idaho, remains uncertain.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. GUNDERSON was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I read this into the RECORD because I think it is important in this dialog that we have some understanding of what we mean by constitutionally protected school prayer, and I think it is important that we do so, that we do understand that we are within the limits as defined by the American Law Division and within the amendment, as I understand, within the Johnson amendment to require a specific policy prohibiting such.

I do not think we are entering the legal quagmire some Members would suggest. I think this amendment does promote a better effort to refine what we mean by constitutionally protected school prayer, and frankly I encourage its adoption.

Mr. FINGERHUT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to respond briefly, if I may, to some of the arguments that have been made here today. This is a troubling issue, and quite frankly, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] for pressing us on this matter, because by his repeated raising of this issue it will undoubtedly force us to grapple with the issue and sooner or later to arrive at the appropriate policy.

I find myself in opposition though today to his amendment and in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Let me make a few remarks in response to some of the points that have been raised.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] previously talked about some cases, very disturbing cases indeed, to every Member of this body, which have occurred in school districts, I assume, in cases in which he has some personal knowledge or familiarity. And with regard to those cases, he said that some of these have been litigated and some have not been litigated because the fact is that some people have access to lawyers and some people do not. But he said for those people who do not, the Johnson amendment would protect them. But I fail to see how that is so, because in any case, whether it is the current sanctions of the court which are responsible for enforcing the Constitution, or whether it would be the added action that would be provided by the amendment of a court withdrawing funding under this important act, nevertheless there would be litigation and lawyers and courts required in order to effectuate the amendment.

A second argument that has been made here today that I think requires a response is that those of us who supported the instruction to the conferees on the Education 2000 bill must necessarily support this amendment because it is crafted in identical language, and indeed it is. And let me say first that the statement by the gentleman from Montana about that vote being incorrect I think is only a partially correct statement, because the stakes in this issue are very much higher and the subject of the Education 2000 bill we were creating a new and very voluntary program into which some school districts might wish to participate if they chose to try and involve themselves in the process of education and goals, and the Johnson language, new to this body at that time, gave us some thought about how we might wish to enforce this constitutional issue of voluntary prayer in that context.

But in this case, the stakes are much higher. In this case, the Johnson amendment seeks to ban the use of Federal funds from the most broadly used Federal funding program for education, education that is used by virtually every school district in the country, certainly by every school district in my congressional district. And what it says to each and every one of those school districts is that they are at risk, if they make an error, or even if any member of their constituency seeks to take them to court believing they have made an error, they are at risk of losing the most significant source of Federal funds that exists.

Now Mr. Chairman, I respect, as I say, the issue that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] is trying to bring before us, and I hope that over the course of these many times of debate that we will reach an appropriate policy. But I believe very strongly that if we are here to protect taxpayer dollars, if we are here to protect the local autonomy of our school districts, which is the backbone of education in this country, the local decisionmaking, then we must reject this amendment at this time, and we must ask that we go back and craft language that does not make our school districts constantly at risk of litigation, constantly at risk of losing this vital source of Federal funds.

Students who are aggrieved have access to the courts today. The Constitution protects them and the courts protect them. To put our school districts at risk of losing all of the funds that are provided under this because of the threat of this kind of litigation is wrong at this stage and at this time, given the state of the law. This is an important issue. There are many people in my district and many of my constituents who care deeply about it and want to see us protect this constitutional right. I want to see us protect this constitutional right. But if we read the language of this amendment and we think about the impact of this very important, significant source of Federal funding, I strongly recommend that the House reject today the Johnson formula. Let us accept the responsible compromise by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], and let us continue to debate and discuss and work with our local school officials, who after all are the ones who are on the line here in finding the appropriate language to accomplish what it is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] seeks to accomplish.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that for today we reject this amendment and accept the Williams amendment.

□ 1910

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by my good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON], and I oppose the Williams amendment.

As was mentioned earlier, this amendment is exactly the same language that the House voted on last month when I offered a motion to instruct conferees on the Goals 2000 bill. That motion to instruct passed the House by an overwhelming vote of 367 to 55, and the other body has also approved this same language by an overwhelming vote of 75 to 22.

Contrary to the statement by the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] a few minutes ago, this amendment does not make any type of prayer compulsory. It simply allows voluntary student-initiated, nondenominational prayer in our public schools.

Most of the arguments, both pro and con, have already been made on this issue, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to read something that was in the Washington Times this past Friday, and I quote from this story on the front page of the Washington Times:

> Attorney General Janet Reno yesterday said she sees calls to permit school prayer as a symptom of violence-plagued communities trying to instill in young people "a sense of self-respect, a sense of regard for others." In an interview with the Washington bureau of Hearst newspapers, Ms. Reno said a renewed interest in school prayer reflects efforts to rehabilitate communities plagued by street shootings and family disintegration, and while Ms. Reno did not endorse repeal of the Supreme Court decision outlawing school prayer, she did go on to say this,

Or the story says this,

> but she said school prayer advocacy, especially in inner cities, is a symptom of people trying to figure every way possible, every way they can to reinforce people's ability to work together, to live together in families, to have a sense of purpose, a sense of self-respect, a sense of regard for others and how we get along with each other.

What a great argument in favor of school prayer are those words by our Attorney General, Janet Reno.

Mr. Chairman, let me add this: William Raspberry, the great syndicated columnist, has written several very fine columns in the last few months about governmental policy toward religion. Mr. Raspberry said in one recent column, "It is a species of intolerance to require the religious to make a secret of their beliefs." In a Christmas column, he wrote this:

> Unfortunately the ACLU also opposes the moment-of-silence substitute for school > prayer. Why? After all, the constitutional requirement is that government not establish religion, not that it root out religion, or to put it another way, our Founding Fathers came here in large part to get freedom of religion, not freedom from religion.

In my home county this past spring, they would not even allow nondenominational prayers at high school graduation, the very same kind of prayers that we hear every day when our sessions are opened here in this House and also over in the Senate.

In a column printed around the country a few months ago, Mr. Raspberry quoted Kevin Hanson, the founder of the Beckett Fund, as saying this about the men who wrote the first amendment:

> They would not have dreamed they were banning Christmas trees or the ability of people to pray in legislatures or to offer simple invocations in high school graduations.

And then Mr. Raspberry asked this pointed question:

> Is it not just possible that antireligious bias masquerading as religious neutrality is costing more than we have been willing to acknowledge?

We need Government neutrality toward religion, not Government hostility toward religion. We need to defeat the watered-down Williams amendment and pass, instead, the amendment offered by my good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON]. It is well meaning. It is well intentioned. It would not lead to a quagmire in the courts, because it is clear, Mr. Chairman, and it is more specific, Mr. Chairman, than is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

I urge passage of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON], which is a version of an amendment that I offered earlier.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, when I first came to this institution several years back, along with the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Everett Dirksen, I would introduce the prayer in public buildings, or prayer in school amendment, and have done so from time to time, relying on the Founding Fathers' intentions that there be no mandatory imposition of religion upon the citizens of the newly named colonies, upon their separation from England, and that is a very simple process. They never denied; they implored the Almighty in all of their deliberations, in everything that they did. They implored the blessings even in the separation itself.

Therefore, I am concerned and disturbed this evening that we are somehow arguing about the how to do it or how to protect it, and deviating from what we need to do, which is to bring prayer back into the families, into the communities, into the schools, into the public meetings, as we do daily when we meet here.

I do not know the intricacies of the amendments. I hear the arguments on both sides, but what we should be doing is that we be given some guidance to the courts that have not given us finite definitions of what is prohibited, what is sanctioned. All that I know is that if we are going to attack crime, if we are going to attack the dissolution of families, if we are going to attack all of the evils that are eating into the heart of our institutions and our country, we need to bring prayer back into the system.

How to do it is probably a very intricate question, but this evening I am disturbed as I hear the amendments pro and con, and I probably would support either one of the amendments, but I think that one of the prior speakers said that we will work it out later. That is not the answer this evening, that we would work it out later. What we need to do is a very simple "yea" or "nay" whether you take the money away or whether you give money to entice. I do not know that that would be a final resolution.

All that we need to do is say that a prayer or prayers can be made or offered in public buildings or in the schools without interfering at all with the prohibition of State-imposed, or the guarantee of, that you have a right, and I may not have added much to the debate here this evening except to add that we need to bring prayer back into the hearts of the American people and into our institutions and everywhere where we need to implore the Almighty as was done by those that founded this great country of ours.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the chairman on his very heartfelt words, and you did add to this debate, because I think you said it very well.

I think Members really ought to get past the buzzwords and inflammatory phrases like "risk of losing funds," "officially sanctioned religion," "compulsory religion." That is not what we are talking about here.

What we are talking about is allowing students or teachers, for that matter, to do the things that the Supreme Court and other courts said that they can do on school campuses. That is all we are talking about.

We are taking two approaches to it. It is amazing to me, and I think the Williams amendment is a giant loophole that allows principals or school boards to use to continue the practices that I outlined earlier where students are discouraged from practicing their own religion, discouraged from holding Bible readings before school, discouraged from praying even before school, and they will not get sanctions against them at all.

I will explain in a moment.

But it is amazing to me, as the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas, has so eloquently pointed out, that we would be debating discouraging constitutionally protected prayer, and that is what we are talking about here, discouraging it.

In light of where we are today, and I quote our distinguished Republican whip when he so often says we have a nation now that has 12-year-olds having children, 15-year-olds being shot, 17-year-olds dying of AIDS, and 18-year-olds graduating with diplomas that they cannot read, and we have gangs proliferating in our schools.

Even here in Washington, DC, they are starting to reassess their school systems and understanding that one of the problems we have in our schools and in our families and in our society is the lack of values, the lack of understanding that the work ethic is important, that stealing is wrong, that having sex outside of marriage is wrong, that doing these kinds of things that we are sanctioning our children to do is wrong, and it is tearing at the very fabric of our society.

All the Johnson amendment says is that you cannot use any funds, you cannot use any funds, Federal funds, if you deny or have a policy that denies constitutionally protected prayer. That is all it says.

Now, the loophole that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] provides is that you cannot use money for setting unconstitutional prayer policy. Now, how much money did it cost or did it cost anything in Corpus Christi, TX, to stop students from praying around a flagpole before school? No money at all. How much money did it take in Dallas, where the students at Skyline High School were threatened by their principal if they continued to read audibly from their bible and pray on the school lawn before school? No money at all.

Mr. FINGERHUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELAY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FINGERHUT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman began his statement by saying we should not rely on buzzwords and then he listed a variety of them. He said, "Including the risk of losing Federal funds." The gentleman just stated that the precise sanction in this amendment, which is what concerns this Member so much, is that the punishment, if a school district makes a mistake, is a withdrawal of the Federal funds, whether or not the action of the school district is wrong. The courts can do that, but this amendment punishes them for that. It is not a buzz word, it is an actual punishment. The debate is not whether or not the action of the school district is wrong, the courts can do that. The debate is whether we are punishing them by removing the Federal funds.

Mr. DELAY. Reclaiming my time, I will answer the gentleman. It is a real message. The gentleman says, "Well, these students at Skyline High School can go to court and sue for damages." But let me tell you, if we pass this into law, that is a very real message to Skyline High School that you will support constitutionally protected prayer. Skyline High School can decide whether they want Federal funds or not. If they are going to discourage children from practicing their religion freely under constitutionally protected mandates, that is just simply the fact.

I want to continue to explain the loophole the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] provides in his amendment.

The loophole is you only get sanctioned if you use money to set these policies. We know setting these policies costs no money. You talk about creating lawsuits; I say to the gentleman from Ohio it will create lawsuits all over the place when a principal threatens children from praying or reading their bibles before school. You will have to take that principal to court. Rather, the principal, getting a directive from the U.S. Congress and the Federal Government that you will not use funds, he will not do that.

So I urge my colleagues to really take a look at these two amendments. The Williams amendment is trying to discourage.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Johnson amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield at this time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] if he wants to wrap up.

Mr. DELAY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the Williams amendment is a loophole and totally guts the idea of not discouraging children from practicing their religion, and I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Williams amendment and vote "yes" on the Johnson/Duncan amendment.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have been following this debate on the Johnson amendment with some interest from my television set in my office. I had not intended to participate. But it reminds me of the conversation that I observed when I was a White House Fellow in the Department of Energy in the early 1980's. I had the honor to attend a staff meeting involving assistant secretaries. We had—obviously the Secretary of Energy was chairing the meeting.

At the end of the meeting, the Secretary of Energy said, "Gentlemen, I just heard a nonintersecting conversation." That is what we have been hearing on this debate on this particular amendment this afternoon. The opponents of the Johnson amendment would have us believe that if it passes, there is the danger that bible-toting missionaries are going to be turned loose in the public classrooms, perhaps even federally funded.

Actually, all the Johnson amendment does is codify that you can have a moment of silent meditation at the beginning of school and, heaven forbid, maybe even having vocal prayer at public events like graduations, if it is student-led and totally voluntary.

Some of the opponents talked about the possible abridgement of civil rights because the student might actually have to hear some sort of a prayer that he or she did not want to listen to or perhaps even observe somebody silently bowing their head in the classroom.

While we have been worrying about these kinds of abridgements of civil rights, we had a student shot to death here in the public schools in Washington, DC, not too long ago. Many parents are afraid to even send their children to school because of dangers about physical safety. We have metal detectors, we have searches, we have dogs looking for drugs. We are worried about some of these issues that have been listened to today.

I think it is very interesting that last week the school board here in Washington, DC, voted to at least investigate the possibility of public prayer in the public schools here. The mayor of Washington said that she was supportive of this idea. I think it is time for a reality check.

I think we ought to pass the Johnson amendment, we ought to defeat the Williams amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] and try to give our local school boards the opportunity to exercise a little common sense.

My grandmother and great-aunt were teachers in a two-room schoolhouse at Spring Creek, TX, in Bosque County at the turn of this century. They allowed voluntary prayer at the beginning of each day. There were no guard dogs in that classroom—there were dogs, but they were dogs that came to school with the children. If they wanted to be converted, they went across the creek, literally, to the Baptist Church that also served as the Methodist Church on alternating Sundays. To my knowledge, no one who attended that school at that time period went to prison, but almost everybody became good citizens and served their country well in whatever capacity.

I support the Johnson amendment.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by thanking my good friend, Congressman JOHNSON, from the great Long Star State of Texas, for offering this amendment and opening up this debate.

Ladies and gentleman, we are all so very, very concerned these days about our children. So, hopefully, when we send our youngsters away to school, they will be in a healthy environment and that good things will happen.

There are so many things going on in our schools today that are worrisome and controversial.

One of my favorite controversies that I unfortunately get involved in with people all too often is this concern about sexual behavior among adolescents. It bothers me a great deal that some people are so insensitive in America today that they think only that if a child does not contract some horrible disease or get pregnant, that the child has had safe sex. And because they reason children are going to do it anyway, there is no need to talk to them about alternative behaviors but to hand out condoms in schools at public expense. Surrender to the most dangerous possible impulse a child may have, and accommodate to that by handing out condoms in the school.

But they have standards, ladies and gentleman; the condom distributors must be properly trained in the distribution of condoms.

What bothers me more than this is the insensitivity of it. Do those people who believe safe sex is not contracting a horrible disease or not getting pregnant, are they so insensitive, Mr. Chairman, that they do not understand about the emotional, the psychological trauma that children go through? Do they not understand the risks that go beyond the physical in this business?

And yet they accommodate to that. Where and when did we as a nation of adults decide that it was the only course of action, to accommodate the most dangerous impulses that we find in our children?

Now, there are other threats that our children face. Congressman BARTON just referred to a child who was murdered on the school grounds with a weapon. Many of us think that the second amendment is as precious as any of the amendment in the Bill of Rights.

However, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] because he perceives this threat, this very real threat to children, is offering a rigorous sanction against the carrying of weapons to schools. I voted for it in committee, and I will vote for it on the floor, because the children must be kept safe, and, if that makes some modest compromise in the second amendment rights of those in the school that will bring things to a school that are inappropriate, then we should address that.

Let us talk then about children. I am told that so long as there are math tests there will be prayer in school and there is nothing we can do about it. Is it possible, my colleagues, that there are some among our school children that have a healthy impulse, a reverend impulse, an impulse to demonstrate their religious convictions even on the school grounds where all the danger is afoot? And, my colleagues, might not we see it in our interests, as adults in this world, to surrender to that impulse with equal fervor and with equal enthusiasm as we surrender to the impulse for children to engage in sexual activity during these childhood years? I do not think that so much. I do not think we put the Bill of Rights at risk if we surrender to the impulse of school children to express their religious belief privately and publicly on school grounds so long as it is voluntarily and freely come to. Can we not surrender, my colleagues, to the impulse to pay respect to their religious beliefs as we have so eagerly rushed forward to pay our respect to their impulse and surrender to their impulse to have childhood sexual activities? Certainly, if we can afford the risk of handing out condoms to children, Mr. Chairman, we can afford the risk that some of them may carry a Bible to school. Can that be such a horrible danger facing our school children? I think not.

So, in that regard, Mr. Chairman, I would ask my colleagues to differentiate between that which is real and that which is not, that which respects the impulse of children and that which does not. Vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] and vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON].

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. UNSOELD. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD] for yielding to me, and maybe we can come near to concluding what has been an important debate about a very important subject.

Let me first say that I and everyone in this Chamber I know has a deep and abiding respect for the zealous beliefs of individual Americans. I want to do nothing with my amendment, nor do I do a single thing with my amendment, to discourage voluntary constitutional prayer in school. In fact my amendment says:

> No funds authorized to be appropriated under this act may be used by any State or local education agency to adopt policies to prevent voluntary prayer and meditation.

Mr. Chairman, like all of my colleagues, I went to school, and I will bet, like all of my colleagues, I prayed in school, particularly every time there was a Spanish test or an algebra test. So, all of us have a deep respect for morality, religion, ethical behavior, and I refuse to allow my colleagues on either side of the aisle, particularly those on the far right, to claim some corner or monopoly over morality and ethical behavior. We believe in it, too. That is not at stake here. That is not what this amendment, either my amendment or the other amendment which I seek to displace this with, is about.

Here, my colleagues, is what I believe is going on:

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON] would say that all money from the Department of Education will be denied any school district, and, by the way, it says not just the money in this act, but school-to-work money, welfare money, all money administered by the Department of Education, will be denied a school district unless they have appropriately dealt with this school prayer issue.

Now that is a hammer, and let me tell my colleagues who the hammer is going to be used by. The hammer is the denial of all Federal money from the Department of Education.

Here is a recent memo to school administrators from a group called the American Center for Law and Justice who commends this very amendment, commends this very amendment which they say was offered by Senator JESSE HELMS in the Senate, and they commended it, and then a few days later they sent out another release which says:

> We will soon release details of employing legal swat teams around the country to file lawsuits against offending school districts.

That is then followed by a letter from the ACLU which warns the same school administrators that we are prepared to challenge school districts that disregard their constitutional obligation.

So, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment would set up the wall. It would divide the communities. It would place teachers and administrators into the briar patch. It would foster the inevitable entanglement between church and state. That is what the gentleman's amendment would do.

My amendment is simple. It simply says that no funds in this act can be used to deny voluntary prayer, meditation, in the schools.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the Williams voluntary prayer amendment.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] and urge its passage.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, there is one problem with the language the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] would offer us here. It is weaker than present law. The fact is that under present law, in the appropriations bills that have been passed every year since 1978, there is specific language that says none of the funds appropriated under this act may deny participation in voluntary school prayer. This gentleman's amendment today weakens the language which is already a part of law, and so what he is asking us to do is not only to turn down the Duncan-Johnson amendment, but he is asking us to go a step further and weaken what is already present law as it applies to voluntary school prayer.

Now I think the House wants to think twice about that, Mr. Chairman, because we have for a period now of about 16 years had a policy very similar to what the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] offers us here this evening, except stronger. And now the gentleman from Montana, I guess knowingly, has come to the floor and suggested he wants to set aside that policy and instead go with this new weaker policy.

I would suggest that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] have, in fact, moved us in the direction, if we want to have stronger language; and all across American I believe that middle-class Americans have decided that we need to have a stronger something to say about school prayer; but all they are suggesting is that schools ought to make certain that constitutionally protected prayer is allowed to take place in those schools and that they have a program for ensuring that it take place. That is all it says.

Now that is stronger than what present law is; I happen to think appropriately so, but the gentleman from Montana wants to weaken even present law.

So I would suggest to the House that what you want to look at here as you consider this amendment is do you want to go with what the gentleman from Montana is suggesting and weaken what is already in present law, or do you want to strengthen our commitment to volunteer school prayer by voting for the Johnson-Duncan amendment.

I would hope that we would turn down the Williams substitute, turn down weakening present law, and instead endorse the Johnson-Duncan amendment, which allows us to have voluntary school prayer for real.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me see if I can understand this debate. We have assault in school, we have no prayer. We have theft in school, we have no prayer. We have drugs in school, we have no prayer. We have condoms in school, we have no prayer. We have all kinds of crime in school, but there is no prayer. There is racism in our schools, there is no prayer. There is hate in our schools, there is no prayer. It is evident from assault to theft to guns to drugs to condoms, there is no God at all, and I think Congress has something to do with that.

The Constitution may have separated church and state from one specific religion, but the Constitution never intended to separate God and the American people. This debate should not be occurring here. Congress is responsible for the schools of our country in their sad shape.

I want to commend the authors of this amendment on the Republican side. I am going to vote with you, and I am going to oppose the Democrat amendment. It is a sad day, Congress, when the only time you hear God mentioned in our public schools is when God's name is taken in vain. Congress has a responsibility for what is happening in this country, and we have split hairs to the point of constitutional debates over whether or not the Constitution would recognize God or in fact prohibit God from our schools.

I think we have gone too far. I think it is time that Congress look in the mirror and Congress take a look at the public school system of America, and pat itself on the back for doing exactly what should not be done.

I am proud to join and support the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] and I wish the Congress would also.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAM JOHNSON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 2(c) of rule XXIII, the Chair may reduce to not less than 5 minutes the time for any recorded vote that may be ordered on the Johnson of Texas amendment without intervening business or debate.

☐ 2013

Mr. COYNE, Mr. MARKEY, Ms. MCKINNEY, and Mr. RUSH changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Mrs. THURMAN changed her vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PETERSON of Florida) having assumed the chair, Mr. DARDEN, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to go on record that during the consideration of H.R. 6, I mistakenly voted for the Johnson amendment on rollcall No. 75. My intent was to vote no. I erred because I believed that the perfecting Williams amendment to the Johnson amendment had passed. I deeply regret this error, and hope that an opportunity will arise prior to final passage of H.R. 6 for the House to amend this portion of the bill.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Speaker, at the end of the afternoon I was unavoidably absent because I was on my way back from El Salvador, where I had the privilege to participate in the U.S. Citizens Observer Mission monitoring the El Salvador election, the first election held in this country since the peace accords were signed in 1992. I therefore missed one rollcall vote on H.R. 6, Improving America's Schools Act. More specifically, I missed rollcall vote No. 73, to strike the title of the bill that reauthorizes bilingual education programs, on which I would have voted "no."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I cast my vote in favor of the Johnson amendment to H.R. 6—rollcall vote No. 75. However, my vote was not recorded. I would like to take this opportunity to express my support for the Johnson amendment to H.R. 6, and had my vote been recorded, it would have been recorded as "aye."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I unavoidably missed rollcall vote No. 73, to strike the title of the bill that reauthorizes bilingual education programs within H.R. 6, "The Improving America's Schools Act."

I strongly opposed Congressman ROTH'S amendment to eliminate bilingual education, and would have voted "no" on rollcall vote No. 73. When one out of every seven children nationally comes to school speaking a language other than English, we need to expand bilingual education programs not eliminate them. These programs teach limited English proficient students English, and give them the opportunity to learn other subjects, like math and science, as they transition into English instruction.

My partial day absence was due to the fact that I was on my way back, along with the President's official observer delegation, from Central America where I was observing and monitoring El Salvador's election as part of the United States Citizens Observer Mission.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained in California and was not able to return to Washington, DC, in time to record my vote on three amendments to H.R. 6.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on the Roth amendment, rollcall No. 73; "no" on the Williams amendment, rollcall No. 74; and "yes" on the Johnson amendment, rollcall No. 75.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1804, GOALS 2000: EDUCATE AMERICA ACT

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 103–447) on the resolution (H. Res. 393) waiving points of order against the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 1804) to improve learning and teaching by providing a national framework for education reform; to promote the research, consensus building, and systemic changes needed to ensure equitable educational opportunities and high levels of educational achievement for all students; to provide a framework for reauthorization of all Federal education programs; to promote the development and adoption of a voluntary national system of skill standards and certifications; and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVING AMERICA'S SCHOOL ACT OF 1994

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 366 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 6.

□ 2016

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, with Mr. DARDEN, Chairman pro tempore, in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole House rose earlier today, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] had been disposed of.

Are there further amendments to title IX?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONDIT

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONDIT: Page 762, after line 8, insert the following new section (and redesignate accordingly):

"SEC. 9508. PROVISIONS TO BE TREATED AS VOLUNTARY UNTIL FULLY FUNDED.

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the provisions relating to opportunity-to-learn standards that impose requirements on States and local educational agencies (whether the development of opportunity-to-learn standards or actions taken to meet such standards) shall be treated as recommendations to the States and local educational agencies and compliance with such provisions shall be voluntary on the part of the State and local educational agencies until the costs of implementing such provisions are fully funded by the Federal Government."

Mr. CONDIT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, my amendment focuses on the opportunity-to-learn standards contained in title I. My amendment will make the development and submission as well as the implementation of the standard voluntary unless the Federal resources are provided to pay the cost incurred in developing the standards.

So it is a simple, straightforward amendment and I would ask for an aye vote.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROBERTS TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONDIT

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBERTS to the amendment offered by Mr. CONDIT: Page 762, after line 8, insert the following:

"SEC. 9508. VOLUNTARY COMPLIANCE.

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, any requirements relating to reporting, planning, and data collection established under this Act that were not required prior to the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994, shall not be required until funds for the cost of implementing such requirements are provided in appropriation acts.

Mr. ROBERTS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the Roberts amendment to the Condit amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I am offering an amendment to the Condit proposal to ensure that all of the additional spending programs that are required in this legislation will be funded by the Federal Government or be considered voluntary for State and local governments until such funding is provided.

For the past several weeks the House has been debating all sorts of aspects of this legislation. they have focused on special State programs, individual programs, learning standards and other new reporting requirements to be placed on State education programs. As this debate has developed, it has become obvious to many of my colleagues that there are considerable new spending and reporting requirements that are contained in this bill, Federal mandates that may or may not be funded in future years. The Congressional Research Service has just now completed an analysis of this bill and found 23, 23 additional requirements that require reporting to all of the titles.

Now, many of us here may disagree on whether this or that new program or requirement should be enacted, and many of my colleagues would agree that all new requirements should be voluntary unless some Federal funds are provided to pay for these new mandates.

I recognize the concerns of the chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] in regard to their view on the need for this legislation and their position that this is an appropriations issue, not an authorizing issue. But unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, unless action is taken at this time during the authorizing process, the mandates will remain mandatory. Unless this language is included at this time to make all mandates voluntary until the Federal funding is provided, States and local governments will possibly be left funding millions of dollars in new reporting requirements.

As a member of the Congressional Caucus on Unfunded Mandates, the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT] and I share a concern over the additional cost being shifted on State and local governments, and for that reason I urge adoption of both the Roberts amendment and the Condit amendment.

Now, after visiting with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], I recognize that my amendment is not in order under the rule, and the amendment can and will be denied consideration.

But I urge my colleagues to recognize the need to include a universal exception to all unfunded mandates contained with this bill. If not my amendment, I at least urge adoption of the Condit amendment.

While many of us here may disagree on whether this or that new program or requirement should be enacted at the Federal level, many of my colleagues would agree that all new requirements should be voluntary unless Federal funds are provided to pay for the new mandates.

I recognize the concerns of Chairman FORD and Congressman KILDEE regarding their view on the need for this legislation and their position that this is an appropriations issue—not an authorizing issue. Unfortunately, unless action is taken at this time, during the authorizing process, the mandates will remain mandatory whether accompanied or not with the necessary Federal funding from the Appropriations Committee. Unless this language is included at this time to make all mandates voluntary until Federal funding is provided, States and local governments will possibly be left funding millions of dollars in new Federal programs.

As members of the Congressional Caucus on Unfunded Mandates, Congressman CONDIT and I share a concern over the additional costs being shifted on State and local governments. For that reason, I urge adoption of both the Roberts amendment and the Condit amendment.

After visiting with Mr. FORD and Mr. KILDEE, I recognize that my amendment is not in order under the rule—and the amendment can and will be denied consideration.

I urge my colleagues to recognize the need to include a universal exception to all unfunded mandates contained within this bill. If not my amendment, I at least urge adoption of the Condit amendment.

CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE,
LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, February 23, 1994.

Subject: "New" Report Requirements in H.R. 6, the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994.

This memorandum was prepared in response to your request for a listing of "new" requirements in H.R. 6, the Improving America's Schools Act (IASA), as reported by the House Committee on Education and Labor. As you requested, this list is limited to requirements that are "new"—i.e., essentially different from any current requirements associated with programs that would be amended and extended by H.R. 6—and that apply to State or local educational agencies (SEAs, LEAs). Requirements that SEAs or LEAs make specific reports to the U.S. Department of Education (ED), or other Federal agencies, as well as to each other (i.e., LEAs to SEA), or to the public are included, as are new requirements for SEA or LEA plans if they are significantly different from current application requirements. It should be noted that current report requirements that would be terminated by H.R. 6, if any, are not included. Further, report requirements in H.R. 6 that involve only ED or other Federal agencies, including required evaluations or reports to Congress, are not included.

Finally, this is referred to below as a "selected" list because we are unable to assure that we have found all such provisions, due primarily to the limited time available to complete this request before House floor action on H.R. 6.

"NEW" STATE OR LOCAL REPORTING REQUIREMENTS IN H.R. 6, AS REPORTED BY THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR—A SELECTED LIST

TITLE I—IMPROVED EDUCATION FOR DISADVANTAGED CHILDREN

2. Sec. 1112—LEA plans (to be submitted to the State).
3. Sec. 1115(c)(2)—Targeted assistance school plans.
4. Sec. 1116(a)—LEAs required to disseminate throughout their communities annual performance profiles for participating schools.
5. Sec. 1118(c)—Parental involvement plans for participating schools.
6. Sec. 1118(e)—School-parent compacts.
7. Sec. 1306—Comprehensive needs assessment and service delivery plan for State agency migrant program.
8. Sec. 1404—State plan for services to delinquent youth and youth at risk of dropping out of school.

TITLE II, PART A—DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM[3]

1. State plan to improve teaching and learning to be submitted as part of SEA application to Secretary; such plan is to include an assessment of State and local needs for professional development.
2. Participating States must submit report to Secretary every 3 years on progress toward performance indicators.
3. Local plan to be submitted as part of LEA application to SEA; LEA application is to include a professional development needs assessment.
4. Participating LEAs must report every 3 years to State on progress toward performance indicators.

TITLE II, PART B—TECHNOLOGY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1994

1. SEAs must file a 5-year educational technology plan with Secretary of Education.
2. LEAs must receive State approval of a technology use plan.
3. Sec. 2207(d) appears to require State agencies for higher education to report annually to SEA on progress of higher education programs.
4. Sec. 2208(d) appears to require library administrative agencies to report annually to SEA on progress of library and literacy programs.

TITLE II, PART C—LIBRARY MEDIA PROGRAM

State must have a plan for school library media.

TITLE II, PART D—SUPPORT AND ASSISTANCE

1. Sec. 2343 requires each comprehensive assistance center to publish and disseminate widely an annual report of services and accomplishments; and requires the Secretary to collect information about the availability and quality of services provided by the centers.
2. Sec. 2347 requires the National Diffusion Network State facilitators to disseminate information about school reform and promising practices and to facilitate communications among educators.

TITLE II, PART E—EDUCATION PROGRAM STRATEGIES

Sec. 2444 requires LEAs using funds for community learning centers to provide information to SEAs describing activities and projects funded under this part.

TITLE III, PART C—PUBLIC CHARTER SCHOOLS

Applicant must provide annually to Secretary such information required to determine if charter school is making satisfactory progress toward school's objectives.

H.R. 6, TITLE II—GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT

Sec. 424 of the General Education Provisions Act (GEPA), as amended, requires each State educational agency to submit a biennial report to the Secretary regarding uses of Federal funds.[4]

H.R. 6, TITLE III, PART B—HOMELESS CHILDREN AND YOUTH

Sec. 722 of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act (McKinney Act), as amended, requires each State Office of Coordination of Education of Homeless Children and Youth to estimate the number of homeless children and youth served under this program, collect information on the educational problems such children and youth, and report every third year to the Secretary.

FOOTNOTES

[1] Note: Title, part, and section references are to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) as it would be amended by H.R. 6, not to H.R. 6, itself.

[2] While SEAs and LEAs are currently required to submit applications for Title I (Chapter 1) assistance that contain some of the same elements as the plans required in H.R. 6, State and local plans, as such, are not currently required, nor are the current application requirements as extensive as the H.R. 6 plan requirements.

[3] Currently, the Eisenhower Mathematics and Science Education Act requires SEAs to submit a 3-year application which is referred to as a "plan"; State applications must have a projection of teacher supply and demand, and an assessment of curriculum needs in math and science; SEAs have to assess effects of their pros and submit results and summaries of local assessments to the Secretary; LEAs have to assess effects of their programs and report results to the SEA.

[4] This is a modification of a current requirement.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS] in that it is not germane.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS] is more general in scope than the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT], and, therefore, is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS] desire to be heard on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

I realize the amendment is not germane under the rule considered. I realize the gentleman's point is well taken under the rule of the House, and my amendment is not germane under the rules of the House to this particular bill.

But it sure as heck is germane to each school district that is going to have to pay for 23 reporting requirements in regards to unfunded mandates.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. For the reasons stated by the gentleman from Michigan and agreed to by the gentleman from Kansas, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word and say this: That the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT] is well intentioned and certainly put before the House with good intentions. But I think it is no longer necessary inasmuch as the Goodling-Kildee amendment was adopted, which takes care of the very problem which the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT] wished to address.

So I think in light of the fact that the Goodling-Kildee amendment has been adopted, this amendment is not necessary.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, based on the compromise with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Footnotes at end of article.

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 6 is the eighth reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 [ESEA]. With the possible exception of the 1978 House consideration of ESEA, the number of amendments offered on the House floor to that act during consideration of past reauthorizations were far fewer than the number that have been offered to H.R. 6.

In general, the types of House floor amendments to ESEA reauthorizations in the past have been concerned with the title I/chapter 1 formula, impact aid, eliminating programs, amending specific program provisions, and, in the early 1970's, school busing for desegregation purposes.

Generally, the House floor amendments to H.R. 6 have been concerned with eliminating programs or creating new programs, and with social issues such as illegal aliens, school prayer, homosexuality, and sex education. Well over 100 amendments were in order to be offered to H.R. 6.

A more detailed analysis of past House consideration of ESEA legislation follows.

With the original consideration of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, an amendment in the nature of a substitute was adopted, along with an amendment limiting the Commissioner of Education to appointing one advisory council with 10 members.

Among the 11 amendments that were rejected, one sought to strike funding for school libraries and textbooks, another limited funding to areas serving large numbers of educationally and economically disadvantaged children, and one substituted the title "Commissar" for "Commissioner" wherever that title appeared in the bill.

The next House consideration of ESEA occurred in 1966. During that consideration, 3 amendments were agreed to and 17 were rejected. The amendments which were agreed to dealt with school busing to correct racial imbalance; the Commissioner's compliance with the Civil Rights Act of 1964 regarding the withholding of funds; and allowing State educational agencies to research the first three grades of education. Most of the amendments that were rejected concerned the title I formula.

1967

During the 1967 House consideration of ESEA, a substitute and six amendments were agreed to; seven amendments were rejected. Among the amendments agreed to were several concerning desegregation and measures to strengthen State educational agencies. The House rejected amendments to block several grant programs, to provide additional funds for children of migratory children; and a teacher-intern program at universities.

1969

In 1969, a substitute amendment and an amendment which prohibited the National Advisory Council on Education from hiring its own staff were adopted; another substitute, along with four other amendments, were defeated. The House rejected amendments that prohibited Federal funds to be used in the busing of students and several impact aid amendments.

1974

The 1974 consideration of ESEA saw 11 amendments agreed to and 19 amendments defeated. The House adopted amendments which concerned involvement of private schools in Federal education programs; the title I set-aside for the territories; the prohibition of Federal funds to be used for busing; the protection of pupil and parent rights; and the requiring of the Commissioner to evaluate programs under the act. The House defeated several amendments to the title I formula, an amendment to phase out the title I program over 4 years, several impact aid amendments, two amendments concerning teacher unions and school district participation in programs, and amendments that sought to change the length of time for which the programs in ESEA were authorized.

1978

In 1978, the House agreed to 38 amendments and rejected 19. Among the amendments agreed to were amendments that addressed title I comparability; the noninstructional duties of school personnel paid with title I funds; the small State minimum for title I concentration grant funds; a new program for early childhood, family, and parenthood education; and Federal assistance to school districts with high incidents of crime to combat vandalism and crime. The House also adopted several bilingual education amendments and several amendments concerning school district compliance with Federal requirements. The House rejected amendments to terminate the followthrough and bilingual education programs; to change the threshold on title I concentration grants; and impact aid.

1981

Because the ESEA reauthorization was done as part of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, there were no floor amendments to ESEA.

1988

In 1988, the House adopted a substitute amendment and seven additional amendments; one amendment was rejected; and three amendments were offered and withdrawn. Among the amendments adopted by the house were amendments to provide grants for the improvement and expansion of critical foreign language study; to require States to include in their application for Federal assistance an assessment of the impact that the programs will have on the family; a study of the impact of the chapter 1 allocation method on States; and encouragement of school districts to recognize the contribution of teachers to the education of students; and two Indian education amendments. The House rejected an amendment to prohibit the use of funds to conduct special projects for the development or operation of programs related to youth suicide prevention or death education before the completion of a study by the Secretary to determine the effects of such curricula on students.

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for H.R. 6, the Improving America's Schools Act, and specifically, title III, part F of the bill which funds the important "We the People" civic education program.

"We the People" is an outstanding program of instruction and competition in the basic principles of the U.S. Constitution. Every year, close to 1 million students in classrooms across our Nation spend months studying our Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Students work together to learn about the development and the basic principles of constitutional democracy.

After gaining a core understanding of the principles of our Government and the rights and responsibilities of citizens, classmates then compete together in the annual "We the People" National Bicentennial Competition on the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The program culminates in a national final competition in Washington.

Importantly, the "We the People" Program is extremely cost effective. For a relatively minor investment, we are educating and empowering close to 1 million students every year to be informed citizens who are willing and able to make a positive contribution to addressing the critical issues of our Nation.

Mr. Chairman, the "We the People" Program has been a huge success in my congressional district on Long Island. I have been enormously impressed by the knowledge and enthusiasm of students participating in the program. I am pleased that the Education and Labor Committee is reauthorizing this important program.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PETERSON of Florida) having assumed the chair, Mr. DARDEN, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EDUCATION AND SHARING DAY, U.S.A.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 329) designating March 23, 1994, as "Education and Sharing Day, U.S.A.," and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not object, but I simply wish to inform the House the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I am pleased to rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 329 designating March 23, 1994, as "Education and Sharing Day, U.S.A.," and I commend my colleagues, our distinguished minority whip, Mr. GINGRICH, and our distinguished majority leader, Mr. GEPHARDT, for introducing this measure.

Mr. Speaker, the future of our Nation, our very way of life, and our democratic system of government is dependent on a highly educated citizenry that must be fully equipped to compete with other nations of the world. We must nurture our desire for learning and to motivate students and teachers to assure that we maintain leadership to continue our American democracy.

The quality of education is essential to our American heritage of cultural and political freedom. Our schools are instrumental in providing our scientific and technical competence. Education holds the key to the future. By designating March 23, 1994, as "Education Day, U.S.A." we call the attention of the American people to the necessity of improving our educational system, by promoting good morals and ethics.

House Joint Resolution 329 also calls attention to the Lubavitch movement, which promotes many of our ethical values and principles upon which the educational system of our great Nation was founded.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 329

Whereas the Congress recognizes that ethical teachings and values have played a prominent role in the foundation of civilization and in the history of our great Nation;

Whereas President William J. Clinton has indicated that ethical considerations should inform the decisions of Society;

Whereas ethical teachings and values have formed the cornerstone of society since the dawn of civilization and found expression in the Seven Noahide Laws;

Whereas sharing and education represent 2 pillars of these laws and ethical conduct;

Whereas Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson, the leader of the Lubavitch movement, is revered worldwide for the contributions he has made to education and sharing;

Whereas the over 2,000 educational, social, and rehabilitative centers administered by the Lubavitch movement advance these ideals for the millions of people whom they serve each year;

Whereas Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson has interpreted, in the miraculous events of our times, the increasing vitality of these ideals for the furtherance of human understanding and betterment;

Whereas the extraordinary life and work of Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson have long been acknowledged by the Congress through the enactment of joint resolutions designating his birthday in each of the last 16 years as "Education and Sharing Day, U.S.C.";

Whereas the Lubavitcher Rebbe's 92nd birthday falls on March 23, 1994;

Whereas in tribute to this esteemed spiritual leader, the Lubavitcher Rebbe's birthday will be designated as "Education and Sharing Day, U.S.A.; and

Whereas such designation will signal a renewal of our Nation's commitment to greater acts of charity, to an enriched emphasis on education, and to the furtherance of ethical teachings and values in the affairs of government and in the lives of our citizens: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That March 23, 1994, the 92nd birthday of the Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson, leader of the worldwide Lubavitch movement, is designated as "Education and Sharing Day, U.S.A.". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SMALL FAMILY FARM WEEK

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 171) to designate March 20 through March 26, 1994, as "Small Family Farm Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to note the minority has no objections to the measure offered by the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON] and, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON], who is the sponsor of this resolution.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I also want to thank my colleagues who signed on to the resolution recognizing the week of March 20 through March 26 as Small Family Farm Week.

It is a recognition that we are giving because, in fact, we are losing small family farms. We are losing the opportunity and way of life that many people have found of value, and I think those of us who are not affected by that do not know what that would mean to our society.

We need to be supportive of small family farms. I certainly commend my colleagues who have joined with me in supporting this resolution. And I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I commend the gentlewoman for sponsoring the bringing to the floor this resolution at this time, a resolution that I am pleased to cosponsor.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERSON of Florida). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution as follows:

S.J. RES. 171

Whereas the small family farmer contributes enormously to the agricultural productivity of the United States;

Whereas the plight of the small family farmer has been in jeopardy in recent times;

Whereas many small family farms continue to operate in the face of financial and credit difficulties;

Whereas the size and crop makeup of family farms varies from region to region in the United States; and

Whereas the small family farm represents the historical foundation of American agriculture: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of March 20 through March 26, 1994, is designated as "Small Family Farm Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the two joint resolutions just considered and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia?

There was no objection.

WOMEN OFTEN MISDIAGNOSED

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to my colleagues' attention an article in the March 1994 edition of Lear's magazine entitled "The Most Common Misdiagnoses."

As the article points out, doctors too often misdiagnose female patients because they do not take their complaints seriously or because they don't think a disease affects women.

As the magazine points out, some of the ailments most commonly misdiagnosed in women are endometriosis, cardiovascular disease, thyroid dysfunction, interstitial cystitis, ovarian cancer, clinical depression, and lupus.

All this is no surprise to women, who historically have been slighted when it comes to health care research and treatment. Recently, we learned that the National Surgical Adjuvant Breast and Bowel Project used falsified data in critical breast cancer studies. What is worse, 3 years have passed without a published reevaluation of these findings.

Recently, women's confidence in the science behind their doctors' recommendations was shaken again when the National Cancer Institute retreated from its national mammography screening guidelines for women in their forties.

And we know in the past women were not included in Government-sponsored clinical trials or drug studies, which prompted the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues to introduce the Women's Health Equity Act.

This blase attitude toward women's lives must change. I would like to take this opportunity to insert the Lear's article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a reminder to my colleagues that when the health care reform train leaves the station, women expect to be on it in numbers equal to men.

[From Lear's, March 1994]

THE MOST COMMON MISDIAGNOSIS

(By Peg Byron)

All too often, doctors make the wrong call on female patients. Early signs of a heart attack are written off as stress; lupus is mistaken for Lyme disease. Women need to be vigilant about these and other overlooked ailments.

Women's health is attracting some overdue attention these days, resulting in welcome policy changes. The Food and Drug Administration, as of this October, will require all mammogram providers to be certified. Last year the Centers for Disease Control expanded the definition of AIDS to include symptoms that occur only in women; this may free up public funds to help HIV-positive women. And the National Institutes of Health, after acknowledging that virtually all information about major diseases derives from studies of men, has taken steps to ensure gender equity in future research.

Nonetheless, problems persist between women and their doctors. Some physicians are still too quick to attribute women's complaints to stress or emotional disorders. "Doctors are much more willing to write off real symptoms in women as hysteria," says Marianne J. Legato, a New York internist. And certain diseases are erroneously perceived—by doctors and patients alike—as primarily affecting men, which means that women may not be tested for some obvious culprits. Below are some commonly missed ailments, most of which affect women disproportionately.

ENDOMETRIOSIS

Endometriosis, which affects more than 5 million women, is a painful, chronic disease that occurs when tissue similar to the lining in the uterus (endometrium) grows where it shouldn't—usually in the pelvic area, sometimes in the abdomen or on old surgery scars. It is now known why this happens. Until recently, the discomfort caused by endometriosis was usually attributed, incorrectly, to menstrual distress. Mary Lou Ballweg of Milwaukee founded the Endometriosis Association in 1980 after doctors could not identify the source of her pelvic-area pain. "They put me on birth control pills," she says. "Then they told me I needed a vacation." It wasn't until she did her own research that she discovered what was wrong. Endometriosis can cause infertility, ectopic pregnancy, ruptured ovarian cysts, adhesions, and general debilitation.

Symptoms: painful and heavy periods; discomfort with intercourse; fatigue; painful bowel movements. Diagnosis: Laparoscopy is needed to confirm diagnosis, though some endometrial growth can be felt with a pelvic exam. Treatment: Endometriosis is often not curable, but painful symptoms can be lessened by drug therapy or surgery. Mild cases may simply be monitored, and pregnancy may bring temporary relief of symptoms. Endometriosis usually goes away after menopause. For more information: the Endometriosis Association, 800–992–3636.

CARDIOVASCULAR DISEASE

The number one killer of women is coronary artery disease—in which plaque deposits build up on the walls of major arteries and disrupt blood flow to the heart. Stroke—in which blood flow to the brain is impaired—is number two. Together they kill nearly 350,000 women per year. But studies have shown that men are more likely than women to get proper attention in the emergency room at the first sign of trouble.

Symptoms: for heart attacks: pain for more than a couple of minutes and a tightening in the chest; shortness of breath; nausea; sweating; lightheadedness or faintness; severe pain in the jaw, neck, shoulder, or arm; severe indigestion not alleviated with an antacid. For strokes: sudden numbness; sudden dimness or loss of vision; loss of speech or trouble understanding speech; sudden severe headaches; dizziness. Diagnosis: exercise stress tests and thallium stress tests, though they are less reliable in women than in men; echocardiograms; angiograms; various imaging techniques, such as CT scans or MRIs. Treatment: coronary artery bypass surgery; angioplasty (whereby a tiny balloon is threaded through the artery and expanded to compress plaque against artery walls); drug therapy; diet changes; exercise. There are some indications that estrogen-replacement therapy reduces heart attack risk in women, but researchers have yet to prove this conclusively. For more information: local chapters of the American Heart Association; the Women's Health Information Service at the National Women's Health Network, 202–347–1140. Women with heart disease may want to enroll in the NIH's first major clinical trial to determine the effectiveness of estrogen supplements in preventing heart disease: 800–54–WOMEN.

THYROID DYSFUNCTION

The thyroid gland, located just below the larynx, regulates hormones that control digestion, heart rate, body temperature, sweat gland sends out the wrong amount of hormones, resulting in any number of different symptoms. Many of these are often blamed on stress, menopause, or even the aging process. But thyroid disease, which affects up to 11 million people, can wreak havoc on the body, eventually leading to serious or even fatal outcomes.

Symptoms: Hypothyroidism (an underactive thyroid) is characterized by chronic fatigue, muscle aches, cold intolerance, constipation, heavy periods, brittle nails, thinning hair, and elevated cholesterol. Hyperthyroidism (an overactive thyroid)can cause insomnia, lighter periods, hand tremors, rapid pulse, heat intolerance, and protruding eyes. Diagnosis: a simple blood test. Treatment: Drugs (such as radioactive iodine) and careful monitoring can, in many cases, cure all symptoms. Surgery is an option for people with enlarged thyroids. For more information: the Thyroid Foundation of America Inc., 800–832–8321; the American Thyroid Association, 800–542–6687.

INTERSTITIAL CYSTITIS

A poorly understood bladder disease that affects some 450,000 women, interstitial cystitis is an inflammation of the bladder wall. It may be caused by infection, a defect in the bladder's lining, or an autoimmune reaction. Until 1986, however, Campbell's Urology, the standard urology textbook, referred to this painful disorder as "a pathway for the discharge of unconscious hatreds." When orthopedist Vicki Ratner, in her third year of medical school, encountered the textbook description for the first time, she knew it was bunk. Suffering from what felt like a nonstop urinary tract infection, she consulted 14 doctors, who tested her for everything they could think of; some then suggested that she quit medical school and get married. After doing her own research, she diagnosed the condition. She then went on to found the Interstitial Cystitis Association.

Symptoms: pain in bladder and urethra; lower-abdominal and often vaginal pain; pain during intercourse; urgent need to urinate many times a day. Diagnosis: After ruling out infections, cancer, and other problems, the physician will perform a cystoscopy, in which a tiny scope is threaded into the bladder to view hemorrhages on the bladder wall. Treatment: There is no cure, though symptoms may be reduced with diet therapy, painkillers, anti-inflammatory drugs, and such drugs as DMSO and Elmiron. Cystoscopy, which stretches the bladder, may also being relief. Surgical removal of the bladder is only for the worst cases. For more information: the Interstitial Cystitis Association, P.O. Box 1553, Madison Square Station, New York, NY 10159.

CLINICAL DEPRESSION

Even though the crushing symptoms of clinical depression can be treated, doctors often assume "the blues" are simply part of every woman's life. "They may just write if off, and that's a tragedy," says Leah Dickstein, a professor of psychiatry at the University of Louisville in Kentucky and a past president of the American Medical Women's Association. In fact, researchers are finding that the disease is due to abnormal brain function rather than psychosocial issues. Depression affects about 11.5 million people and occurs about twice as often among women as men. Despite this, says Susan Blumenthal, an NIH psychiatrist and cofounder of the Society for the Advancement of Women's Health Research, most antidepressant drugs have been tested on men.

Symptoms: According to the National Institute of Mental Health, at least five of the following symptoms must be apparent nearly every day for at least two weeks: a depressed mood; suicidal thoughts; changes in sleep, appetite, or energy; decreased interest in sex; slowed speech; feelings of worthlessness; diminished ability to concentrate. Diagnosis: evaluation by a psychiatrist. Treatment: Most clinical depression can be effectively treated with therapy and drugs. For more information: the National Institute of Mental Health, 800-421-4211; the National Foundation for Depressive Illness, 800-248-4344.

OVARIAN CANCER

While cancer of the ovaries is relatively rare, it is often deadly, simply because early detection is so difficult. Nearly 22,000 women get the disease each year; more than 13,300 die of it annually. And like comic Gilda Radner, many women waste precious time before a doctor thinks to look for ovarian cancer. Often the disease is mistaken for an ulcer or a gallbladder problem. The earlier treatment begins, the better the chance for survival.

Symptoms: prolonged abdominal pain or bloating; the sensation that clothes are too tight. Diagnosis: Three tests—a pelvic exam, a sonogram, and the CA-125 blood test—have yet to prove effective at identifying ovarian cancer. Surgical biopsy (laparoscopic) is the only way to confirm diagnosis. Treatment: surgery to remove ovaries and any tumors; chemotherapy (including, sometimes, taxol); radiation. For more information: the Society of Gynecologic Oncologists, 401 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, IL 60611, provides referrals to doctors and clinical trials. Women with a family history of this disease should see a genetic counselor and may want to enroll in clinical trials conducted at major medical centers to gauge the effectiveness of the above-mentioned tests.

LUPUS

Systemic lupus erythematous, commonly known as lupus, is an autoimmune disorder of unknown origin that afflicts nearly half a million women. Characterized by flare-ups and remissions, it mimics other ailments. Patients occasionally suffer extreme mood swings, and are inappropriately referred to a psychiatrist. An unusual facial rash might be misdiagnosed as rosacea. Joint pain can be mistaken for signs of Lyme disease. And persistent fatigue could erroneously suggest chronic-fatigue syndrome. If left untreated, lupus can attack major organs, especially the kidneys. It tends to appear before age 45 and is more common in African American and Hispanic women than in other groups.

Symptoms: low-grade fever, swelling and aching joints and muscles; digestive problems; easy bruising; extreme reaction to cold; pain with deep breaths; anemia; chronic fatigue; mood swings; butterfly-shaped facial rash; mouth ulcers; hair loss; occasionally, even seizures. Diagnosis: an array of blood and urine tests. Treatment: There is no cure. Drugs, regular rest, and sunscreens to prevent rashes can keep the disease in check indefinitely. Early diagnosis can improve response to treatment. For more information: the Lupus Foundation, 800-558-0121.

THE NAZI DEATH CAMPS, AND "SCHINDLER'S LIST"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, I want to speak tonight briefly about an incredible motion picture, "Schindler's List." But before I do, I will ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD an article from this week's USA Weekend. This has a multimillion circulation. It is an article by a gentleman who I think is the best movie critic in the United States, Michael Medved. He is as much a philosopher as he is a critic of films.

Michael Medved writes an article entitled, "It Is Safe To Go Back Into the Dark,"meaning the darkness of movie theaters. He said that Monday's Oscars, which start in about 24 minutes, will "showcase a welcome change at the movies, but there is a long way to go, a controversial critic argues." By Michael Medved.

Now, of course, USA Weekend calls him controversial only because I guess he believes in the Mosaic law and the ethics upon which this country was built—Jewish/Christian ethics. He goes to a synagogue and he has respect for the Christian tenets that grew out of Judaism. He is a hero to me.

I want to put this into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, his great article.

The article follows:

[From the USA Weekend, Mar. 18-20, 1994]

IT'S SAFE TO GO BACK IN THE DARK

(By Michael Medved)

This year on Oscar night, at all the glamorous parties around town, Hollywood really will have cause to celebrate. The major nominees for Academy Awards represent the most distinguished crop of contenders in recent memory and 1993 box-office figures reflect rekindled public enthusiasm for the American film industry. After three consecutive years of steadily shrinking attendance, the number of moviegoers increased sharply.

In part, this unmistakable improvement in the public's response to Hollywood stemmed from an industry-wide shift in the direction of family entertainment. Those millions of movie fans who'd been yearning for wholesome alternatives discovered a startling wealth of new titles that parents and children could enjoy together.

Future historians may, in fact, point to 1993 as a decisive turning point for popular culture, with significant changes in network television as well as motion pictures. The year just passed could well be remembered as the year that Hollywood finally got the message, and started to make a serious effort to reconnect with the values of ordinary Americans.

The readers of this magazine should know that they played a part in this historic process. Two years ago, USA Weekend ran early excerpts from my controversial book Hollywood vs. America as a cover story under the title "One angry critic." The editors invited readers to call in to register their agreement or disagreement with my statement: "Hollywood no longer reflects—or even respects—the values of most American families."

The volume shattered all records from the magazine's previous six years: 54,453 callers managed to get through on the jammed phone lines to register their agreement; 21,221 callers said they disagreed. The actual number of "yes" votes would have been many times higher had the lines been able to handle them all: Phone company computers registered 400,000 unsuccessful attempts to call the "yes" line.

This overwhelming reaction attracted a great deal of attention in the entertainment industry, because it corresponded so closely to accompanying evidence that people meant what they said when they expressed a preference for family-friendly material.

For a long time, the conventional wisdom in Tinseltown dictated that a movie had to include harsh language, explicit sex and vivid violence to rake in big bucks. But I proved in Hollywood vs. America that this notion had no factual basis. Comprehensive computer analysis showed that, when it came to average receipts at the box office, G- and PG-rated movies aimed at families outperformed "hard-edged" R-rated movies more than 2-to-1. Moreover, this pattern of higher average returns on movies with softer ratings repeated itself 10 years in a row, even as Hollywood steadily—and self-destructively—increased the overall percentage of R-rated material. In other words, an objective examination of the commercial track record showed that the growing obsession with sleaze and gore represented not only bad citizenship, but also bad business.

A few weeks after the release of my book, the press reported another major study that reached the same conclusions. Paul Kagan Associates, one of the industry's most respected consulting firms, declared: "Ironically, while R-rated films are less likely to score big at the box office and are less profitable than films with other ratings . . . the percentage of R-raters in the mix has increased from 50.3 percent in 1989 to 58.2 percent in 1991." In other words, the movie industry might not be evil—as many parents had come to believe—but it most certainly could be described as dysfunctional.

Before long, industry leaders began to face up to their long, awkward record of ignoring the public. On Dec. 13, 1992, The Los Angeles Times ran an article headlined "At the box office, R doesn't rate as high as PG" saying that "Hollywood is taking note of two recent studies . . . point out that PG-13 and lower ratings are more likely to turn a profit than those rated R." The story went on to note that even Eddie Murphy had agreed to restrain his penchant for salty dialogue in the upcoming Beverly Hills Cop III—which means that the irreverent young star might have to master a whole new vocabulary.

Prestige journals started reporting a sea change in Hollywood's thinking. The New York Times ran an analysis, "Hollywood testing the financial value of family values," listing an impressive array of new projects the writer called a "feel-good flood." A few months later (March 22, 1993), a Los Angeles Times story headlined "A startling new concept: family films" quoted Bruce Berman, head of worldwide distribution at Warner Bros., saying: "This resurgence of family pictures is no coincidence. We've begun to realize there's a big audience out there."

Many of his colleagues from the executive suites began making similar pronouncements. On March 9, 1993, a year after USA WEEKEND's "One angry critic" piece and the accompanying call-in, Sony/Columbia Pictures chairman Mark Canton told the leading convention of movie exhibitors: "Together . . . we can make the needed changes. If we don't, this decade will be noted in the history books as the embarrassing legacy of what began as a great art form. We will be labeled 'the decline of the empire.' . . . Any smart business person can see what we must do: make more PG-rated films."

Even Jack Valenti, an unfailingly eloquent apologist for Hollywood as head of the Motion Picture Association of America, took up the new theme. Delivering his annual "State of the Industry" address to the same gathering Canton addressed, he conceded: "We have to increase the theater audience. We just have to do it." He acknowledged that the best way to achieve that purpose would be to "start pictures with less violence, less sensuality and less raunchy language." Less than a year before, Valenti had attacked me in a magazine interview as a "singularly uninformed individual who leaps from soggy premises to stupid conclusions." Apparently, a few months' sober reflection made my premises and conclusions look a good bit less soggy and stupid, as he unmistakably echoed arguments that I had been making for a long time.

As these Hollywood honchos' statements make clear, the industry's newfound enthusiasm for family entertainment in no way represents an abrupt attack of conscience. But it does reflect a spasm of enlightened self-interest and common sense.

Pioneer movie mogul Samuel Goldwyn phrased the same common sense in memorably concise terms some 50 years ago. "It's always better to sell four tickets than two!" he repeatedly reminded his underlings—suggesting that to lure Mom, Dad and their two kids together is preferable to forcing the parents to pay a baby sitter so they can go alone.

Fortunately, this logic provided its irrefutable force at the box office in 1993. The three top money makers released last year—Jurassic Park, The Fugitive and Mrs. Doubtfire—all happened to be PG–13 movies with powerful appeal to kids as well as their parents. Although may observers thought Jurassic Park's rampaging dinosaurs were too menacing for small kids, Steven Spielberg at least deserves credit for toning down the gore and horror in the original book by Michael Crichton. By the same token, had The Fugitive appeared a few years ago, it might well have been an R-rated bloodbath full of dismemberment and crude macho language; as it was, director Andrew Davis kept faith with his broader PG–13 audience by crafting a marvelously old-fashioned thriller that kept you at the edge of your seat without trying to turn your stomach.

At the same time, some of the most serious, brilliant (and Oscar-contending) films were rated PG, including The Remains of the Day, Shadowlands and The Age of Innocence. That last title is an especially important milestone, because it is the work of Martin Scorsese, Hollywood's most acclaimed director. When this moody genius turns from Mean Streets to Clean Streets, following up the lurid Last Temptation of Christ, Goodfellas and Cape Fear with a stately, elegant adaptation of an Edith Wharton novel, you can be sure powerful changes are at work within the creative community.

Scorsese's shift illustrates one of the most positive aspects of Hollywood's new directions, which involve slight but significant changes in overall aesthetic standards, not just a commercially motivated fad for "kiddie" flicks. In the recent past, the most influential film commentators saved their most lavish praise for dark, disturbing, "cutting-edge" productions, as if we had abandoned traditional ideas of beauty and worth, accepting the ability to shock as a substitute for the old ability to uplift or inspire. This year, the movies that won the most prestigious Oscar nominations reflect a far healthier diversity—beginning with the likely winner for best picture.

The last two best picture winners, The Silence of the Lambs (1991) and Unforgiven (1992), were technically brilliant, superbly acted but spiritually empty explorations of the depths of depravity, demonstrating the seductive power of evil. Schindler's List, on the contrary, describes the seductive power of goodness. It focuses on the convincing transformation of a Nazi opportunist (Liam Neeson) into a most unlikely savior who risks everything for others. Though set in one of history's most tormented moments, it stirs the soul with hope and gratitude.

Some of the nominated female actors show an even more surprising and welcome development in this turning-point year: a new willingness to look seriously, even sympathetically, at religious faith. No issue has more clearly demonstrated the entertainment industry's unnecessary alienation of a huge segment of its potential audience than the contemptuous attitude toward traditional believers in a long series of recent (invariably money-losing) films. This year, however, Debra Winger won a nomination for best actress for her role in the exquisite Shadowlands, in which the faith of both main characters, the famed Christian scholar C.S. Lewis (Anthony Hopkins) and his late-in-life wife, Joy Gresham (Winger), is presented with tenderness and respect. And Rosie Perez is a frontrunner for the best supporting actress award for her role in the haunting Fearless, which probes questions of faith and fate with intensity and integrity.

The crowd-pleasing Rudy, the inspiring story of an undersized football wannabe who nurses impossible dreams of playing for Notre Dame, features the most affectionate characterization of a priest (played by Robert Proskey) since Bing Crosby's death. At the same time, TV's L.A. Law welcomed a "born-again" Christian character who, as played by Alexandra Powers, amazed most observers by turning out to be a beautiful, brilliant, capable idealist.

The recent changes are encouraging for many reasons, but they hardly signify the start of a messianic age. Last year helped to ease, but did not solve, Hollywood's ongoing crisis in values. In spite of all the positive developments, the industry still creates scores of exploitative, gratuitously violent films, with far too many R releases (61.2 percent of '93's total, according to MPAA figures) for an intelligent or effective mix. Even worse are the out-of-place elements that turn up even in family-oriented features, rudely shocking moviegoers. Why include a sequence showing attempted date rape in the charming Beethoven's 2nd? Why insert a scene into the handsomely crafted Iron Will (one of '94's best family films so far) in which the 17-year-old hero solves a crucial problem by threatening a rival with a gun?

These are minor quibbles, of course, but they remind us that the situation in the movie business is always fluid and unpredictable, and that the current new directions will continue only with encouragement from the public and critics.

Hollywood's recent renewal shows an aroused, engaged public can have a profound impact on the direction of show business. Two years ago, I ended my USA Weekend story by expressing my "hope that this appalling but amazing industry will regain its bearings and once again merit the affection of its audience." We all can feel gratified that recent developments have moved us closer to realizing that hope.

Mr. DORNAN. It shows the difference in 2 years, it shows the picture of the great English actor Anthony Hopkins, who has been made a peer of the realm, a lord, and it shows Lord Hopkins in March 1992, "The Silence of the Lambs." Hannibal Lector Cannibal. It shows him in his Academy-nominated performance tonight, March 1994, "Shadowlands," the story of C.S. Lewis, Christian scholar.

Mr. Speaker, I went to see "Schindler's List" about 2 weeks ago. The theater was almost empty. It was in a multiplex group of theaters.

I asked the manager why there was not a very big crowd. He said the theater had filled the first week, but that people who had an interest in the Holocaust were the ones who filled the theater. I believe it will win the Academy Award as the Best Picture tonight. That will help a little bit.

But he said he heard some people who came in to see other films say they did not want to go through the experience.

Now, you cannot make a film about the Holocaust without shocking people, without stabbing their conscience, without making them think about the history of our times. As I heard Phil Donahue say on his show the other day, he was alive while this was all going on; so was I and so were you, Mr. Speaker. It is hard to believe that these nightmares took place in the 1940's following the great world's fair in New York in 1939 and 1940.

But the reason that this brilliant—and he is still very young—director-producer, Stephen Spielberg put it in black and white was to tone down some of the blood and the horror and also to capture the starkness of World War II, which we recall in our memories as a black-and-white war because of most of the newsreels.

I would say that someone cannot lay claim to being, not an intellectual but an educated person alive today without seeing this film. It is not a movie, it is an experience, an historical experience like spending 3 hours and 15 minutes at the Holocaust Museum or as a tourist, for example, going to a beautiful Bavaria in Germany, visiting the pubs, the beer cellars in Munich, and then taking the time to go less than an hour outside of Munich to the first of all the concentration camps, Dachau, when it was run by Hess.

I took my younger son Mark—he is not so young, he is in his thirties—a few years ago to a horrible experience but a deeply moving one. We visited in Poland all of the extermination death camps; drove 40 minutes north of Warsaw to Treblinka, to Sobibor, spent the night, then went to Belzec, to Mydanyck, and then we took a short detour to a work camp called Placow. Little did I know that that would be the principal camp in "Schindler's List."

Then we went to Auschwitz, the satellite camp Birkenau, and completed the six camps designed just to exterminate millions of people up at Chelmo. It was night, the third day had gone by, and my son sat across the hood of the car and said, "Dad, look at all the stars in the sky and imagine each one of them as each one of the 6 million souls of the Jewish people whom Hitler managed to exterminate until he ran out of time." I reminded my son it was 12 million who died in the concentration camps.

I would beg anybody, I repeat, who wants to engage in serious conversation about the hate crimes arising over the world, even in our own country; you cannot discuss skinheads, the Aryan nation, Farrakhan, you cannot probably understand the whole crisis in the Middle East, the up and off and on again peace process, unless you take the time to visit the Holocaust Museum, as close to us as the Lincoln, closer than the Lincoln Memorial, right next to the Washington Monument.

And I would suggest that my colleagues, yes, subject themselves to the intellectual exercise of sitting there and watching "Schindler's List." Spielberg is a remarkable young man. He already has the Irving Thalberg Award for his life's work, and I will finish on this, Mr. Speaker:

He is nominated for three awards for "Jurassic Park," plain old popular, populist film. He will win two of those. He is nominated 12 times for "Schindler's List." I predict he will win 9 of those, maybe 10. To take 12, 11, even 10, but 15 nominations is incredible. See the work of this fabulous young artist, and, even if he thinks the sixties were the generation of greed, it made him a multimillionaire. So, we do not agree on politics, but I certainly agree this young man is a remarkable historian.

I say to my colleagues, "Schindler's List"; see it, and you'll be glad you did.

TAIWAN SHOULD BE ADMITTED TO THE UNITED NATIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERSON of Florida). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Asia and Pacific Subcommittee, I would like to offer my perspective on an issue of particular importance to the Asian Continent: U.N. membership for Taiwan.

Mr. Speaker, it makes little sense to continue to exclude Taiwan from the United Nations.

Whatever logic and whatever political rationale that formerly existed for treating Taiwan as a subset of China or as a government in exile has long since faded.

In the post-cold-war era, we must take a realistic view of the world.

We must realize that the U.N. membership includes 184 nations, and excludes only a handful of very small countries and one large one, Taiwan.

Taiwan has 21 million people, a population greater than the great majority of U.N. members. Yet we deny Taiwan membership.

Taiwan has taken a number of steps in recent years toward democracy and political reform. Indeed, in many respects we should celebrate the success story in Taiwan—particularly when we consider the difficulty in convincing the People's Republic of China of the importance of behaving as a responsible member of the world community. We simply do not have that problem with Taiwan.

There has been no martial law for 7 years, and the most recent elections were the most free in modern Taiwanese history. Yet we do not reward progress. Instead we deny them their own seat.

Taiwan is America's 6th largest trading partner; it is the 14th largest trading nation in the world.

Its foreign currency holdings are the largest in the world.

Taiwan has the 20th largest gross domestic product in the world.

Taiwan already has been admitted to GATT and APEC.

Taiwan is truly one of the strongest of the little tigers of Asia. Its economic future appears very bright.

Mr. Speaker, it simply does not make sense to exclude Taiwan from the United Nations—especially if our foreign policy is going to be increasingly interlinked with economic policy.

The United Nations, for all its faults, remains the preeminent multilateral international organization. Excluding Taiwan certainly conveys the wrong message to the world community.

I believe we should no longer deny an important global economic force representation in the most important of world forums.

We treat Taiwan as an international pariah for outdated reasons.

The geopolitical and ideological basis for our policy toward Taiwan no longer serves any useful purpose.

The reality is that Taiwan is a strong player in the world community.

That fact is indisputable.

Taiwan is an increasingly significant member of the Pacific rim community.

The 21 million residents of free and independent Taiwan must be allowed their own seat in the United Nations.

MY ADVICE TO THE PRIVILEGED ORDERS

The Speaker pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, last week Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan met with President Clinton. This is neither unusual, controversial, nor startling. It is a practice that has been common as long as I can remember as a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs for 32 years. It is proper because the American people have elected the President, and he, in turn, has chosen and selected members of the Federal Board, and it would be proper for them to review the country's economic health and financial policies. But under the secrecy role of the Fed, the newspaper, the Washington Post, as of Saturday, March 19, reports White House talk sinks bond prices, Clinton-Greenspan meeting starts rumors. Now this, of course, is also a part of what should be the oversight jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs and the reporting requirements for monetary policy legislated in the Humphrey-Hawkins Act of 1978.

The Federal Open Market Committee [FOMC], the powerful 12-member committee of the Federal Reserve that determines the Nation's monetary policy, should recognize this need for accountability to the Congress and the American public. The FOMC meets tomorrow. One of the topics committee members will reportedly discuss is how to reply to my request that the FOMC make public complete minutes of its eight annual meetings and how it should promptly disclose any decisions to raise or lower interest rates.

These reforms, contained in my legislation, H.R. 28, the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act of 1993, are not an attempt to influence or micromanage the Fed. The Fed would continue to remain independent of short-term political pressures. These reforms would simply establish individual accountability for the members of the FOMC because the Nation has the right to know what each individual member of the FOMC thinks about monetary policy. This is a basic requirement of decisionmakers in a government bureaucracy in a democracy. Supreme Court Justices publicly state their opinions—and justice is better served.

Not so the Fed. Far from making its opinions public, in 1976 the FOMC stopped releasing complete minutes of its meetings. The then Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Arthur Burns, went as far as to testify that no detailed minutes would be taken after this time. This testimony was intended to block Freedom of Information Act [FOIA] and other requests from the Congress, press and public for detailed accountability for FOMC discussions. I found out on October 26, 1993, that this statement was untrue. The Federal Reserve, in fact, has maintained a 17-year treasure trove of transcripts of its FOMC meetings.

It was not easy to elicit this admission from Federal Reserve officials. I had asked specifically in my letter of invitation that each of the Federal Reserve Bank presidents and Governors slated to appear before my committee on October 19, 1993, independently disclose what they knew about the records being kept of FOMC meetings.

My colleagues, on October 15, 4 days before they were to testify before the committee, the FOMC held one of two conference phone calls where they discussed their strategy for this upcoming hearing. On January 13, 1994, after long negotiations, my staff listened to a tape and read the transcript from this call.

During this call many of the FOMC members found out perhaps for the first time, that the Federal Reserve has maintained 17 years of transcripts dating back to 1976, the year the FOMC erroneously claimed it had stopped taking minutes of its meetings. During the conference call, participants indicated they were worried how this embarrassing information would look when seen in the harsh light of day.

The Federal Reserve staff tried to calm their fears, with one staff member indicating that the Fed planned to try to hide the existence of the 17 years of transcripts from the Banking Committee. He announced in the conference call that the "[Fed] Chairman [Alan Greenspan] is not highlighting these transcripts * * *. We're not waving red flags." Chairman Greenspan then read his prepared testimony which conveniently left out any mention of 17 years of FOMC transcripts.

During the call, some of the Fed officials despaired that they would not be able to hide the existence of the transcripts for long, and that Chairman Greenspan should offer to release them in 5 years but settle for 3 years. The general counsel of the Federal Reserve warned that in the event of FOIA requests he saw the chances of the Fed holding on to these FOMC transcripts for longer than 3 years as not good.

I urge the Federal Reserve not to stonewall and to make the full transcript of the conference call public. There is no sensitive material involved. No monetary policy was discussed, rather the discussion is centered around a plan to mislead the Congress when Federal Reserve witnesses were to appear before the Banking Committee 4 days later. As Dallas Federal Reserve Bank President Robert D. McTeer, Jr. said during the call, the Fed "had better quit stonewalling." Federal Reserve Congressional Liaison Don Winn said, "I don't have any sense that they [the Banking Committee] have any knowledge whatever of what we've been talking about."

The plan to conceal the existence of these 17 years of FOMC transcripts was actively carried out when all 16 Fed witnesses failed to reveal to the Banking Committee at the October 19, 1993, hearing that they knew about the transcripts. When asked about a permanent record of FOMC meetings by Congressman MAURICE HINCHEY of New York, Chairman Greenspan testified:

> There is no permanent electronic record, that is correct. We obviously have rough notes.

But these are verbatim transcripts, not rough notes. Chairman Greenspan deliberately shaded the truth. I pursued my inquiry and on October 26, 1993, Chairman Greenspan admitted that there were 17 years of complete FOMC transcripts. The FOMC agreed to edit them at a snail's pace and to make them public with a 5-year lag, which means we will have to wait 5 years before we can read the transcript of this week's FOMC meeting. This is wholly unacceptable. The Fed surely won't be harmed by letting the light shine in, so we can all know what it is doing, and why.

I think it is long past time for the FOMC members to change their version of accountability to one that is compatible with full accountability of government officials in a democracy. I therefore urge the Fed to comply with my requests to give the Banking Committee the FOMC transcripts, to continue the practice begun on February 4, 1994, of promptly announcing monetary policy changes, and to make the transcripts of FOMC meetings available on a timely schedule. Full accountability will enhance the credibility and stature of the Federal Reserve. It cannot afford to do less and still earn any trust from the American people whom it serves.

WHITE HOUSE TALK SINKS BOND PRICES—CLINTON-GREENSPAN MEETING STARTS RUMORS

(By Clay Chandler)

A hastily convened meeting yesterday between President Clinton and Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan at the White House sent a shudder through the bond market and generated broad expectation that the central bank will raise short-term interest rates at a key policy meeting next week.

Clinton aides insisted there was nothing unusual about yesterday's meeting. But the fact that Greenspan canceled a long-standing speaking engagement in Houston for yesterday's one-hour audience with the president kicked Wall Street's rumor mill into overdrive.

Many market observers speculated that Clinton summoned Greenspan to the White House in a last-ditch effort to stop him from raising short-term interest rates at Tuesday's meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee, the central bank's main policy board.

Others guessed that Greenspan had initiated the meeting to warn Clinton that he planned a substantial rate increase at the FOMC meeting.

Both theories gave markets the willies. At the end of trading yesterday, the Treasury's 30-year bond had dropped 27/32 point, or $8.44 per $1,000 in face value, driving up long-term interest rates to 6.90 percent from 6.82 percent. Stocks recoiled as well early in the day, before closing higher amid heavy volume related to options trading.

The Fed last engineered a rise in short-term rates on Feb. 4, when it boosted the federal funds rate a quarter of a percentage point for the first time in five years.

Yesterday's White House meeting was "a big mistake," said Charles Leiberman, managing director at Chemical Securities Inc. He argued that Greenspan now must raise short-term rates at least a quarter of a percent at next week's FOMC meeting to maintain his credibility in financial markets. Anything less, he said, "will give the impression that Greenspan's arm can be twisted by the administration."

The White House professed surprise at the market's adverse reaction to the meeting. "This was a routine meeting between the president and the chairman," said Gene Sperling, deputy director of National Economic Council.

Clinton and Greenspan "had a wide-ranging discussion on the economy," Sperling said, but there was "no discussion whatsoever about the FOMC meeting and the chairman did not in any way signal or indicate any future Fed policies on interest rates."

Greenspan meets with Clinton every six to eight weeks to talk generally about the economy. As a rule, the White House does not publicize those meetings. Word of yesterday's meeting surfaced because Greenspan was scheduled to give a speech at a conference sponsored by the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, but bailed out suddenly to meet with Clinton.

The abrupt change in Greenspan's schedule, combined with the fact that the FOMC meeting is just days away, sparked the firestorm of speculation.

Some White House officials acknowledged yesterday that the timing of the meeting was ill-advised.

But members of Clinton's economic team said they didn't know Greenspan would have to cancel a speaking engagement to see the president.

White House handling of the meeting provoked the ire of many in the market yesterday. "The market is confused by actions of Greenspan and the administration," said Thomas Sowanick, chief fixed-income strategist at Merrill Lynch & Co. "It's not clear to Wall Street that the White House understands the dynamics of how the bond market works."

IMPORTANT ISSUES FACING AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERSON). Under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the opportunity to address the House tonight on a number of important issues that are facing the country today, that of defense, that of health care, that of the family and taxes and crime, and so forth.

I am going to start out by yielding the floor to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN].

Mr. HANSEN. I appreciate my friend from Georgia yielding the floor to me.

Mr. Speaker, it has been interesting as we go through the downsizing of the military, we all realize that this is a necessary thing to do. But the question comes down to how far do we go?

We are going through a base closing. We have done a 1991 and 1993. We are looking at a 1995. We are finding out the Pentagon does not have the money to come up with the promises they made as far as defense conversion, as far as cleaning up the toxic wastes, all of the economies of the area. I do not see that money coming about as we first anticipated it would. We have a big backlog.

Having sat for 6 years on the Restoration Environment Panel of the Committee on Armed Services, I do not think there is enough money in the whole defense budget to take care of the toxic wastes we see in the various bases, but we are looking at those things. We know every time there is a debate on the floor, people stand up and say the cold war is over. Why are we spending all this money on defense?

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk for just a moment on the history of what has happened in this country of America where we are all Pollyannas and want to believe the very best. We want to believe that all is well. Peace on Earth, goodwill toward men. No more problems for any of us.

Unfortunately, that is not what history tells us. Those who choose not to learn from history seem to relive it. That has been the case of the United States of America.

During the First World War, my father was in that one. He flew Jennies down in Texas at Kelly Field, that fine old airplane that many of us look back on and those of us who have been pilots enjoyed that very much. I remember my dad talking about how euphoric they were when the war ended, the war to end all wars, bring the doughboys home. It is all done. We have nothing more to worry about.

Then in a few short years, just a little over 20 years, here came the Second World War, and the United States was not ready to get into it, because after the First World War, we went too far too fast. We wanted to believe this Pollyanna thing that all is well. There is nothing more to worry about. Things are OK in the world today. We have brought the boys home. There is nothing more.

In the Second World War, probably one of the bitterest wars ever fought on the face of the Earth, look at all the people we lost, both in the Pacific and in Europe. Look at the terrible things of war that were created. Following that, again, the same euphoria seemed to permeate the people of America, all is well. There is nothing more to worry about.

I still remember my father saying to me, you were too young for the Second World War, you will be too old for the next one. Again we disarmed too far and too fast and found ourselves after winning that one at a point where a man by the name of Kim Sung from North Korea said to a man by the name of Stalin from Moscow that I can push the people off that peninsula in 3 weeks and the United States will not respond.

However, he read that one wrong, as we all know, and we did respond, and the Korean War started. I am a Korean War veteran myself. We got through that one. Then Vietnam, that terribly unpopular war.

After each one of those, what does the United States do? We disarm too far, too fast. And a few little ones like Panama, Grenada, Libya, and then the Persian Gulf, which was probably a textbook war, if there can be such a thing.

Now we find ourselves in the position of doing it again. I have the greatest respect for people like Chairman DELLUMS and Chairman SAM NUNN. But as I look at what we are doing now, we find ourselves, first we were looking at the force structure that Dick Chaney, Colin Powell, and George Bush worked on, which was basically a 25-percent reduction in military. Now under the Clinton administration we are seeing closer to a 40-percent reduction in military, which I personally am worried about, and I feel we find ourselves maybe in the same position.

I know the Director of the CIA, Mr. Jim Woolsey, has made a very interesting statement. He said the Soviet Union was like a great big dragon out in the jungle. And that dragon has now split apart and now we have 50 poisonous snakes.

Think about it. We do not have to be too bright to figure out there are poisonous snakes in various areas. You can read Jane's, the defense magazine, and know what is happening in Libya as far as biological and chemical, know what is happening in Iran and Iraq. We know what is happening in North Korea, and many areas. These 50 slithering poisonous snakes are all over.

Yet, at the same time, we are disarming the military so rapidly that do not we ever learn from history? Didn't we learn what happened? The First World War, the Second World War, Korea, Vietnam, one after another? Are we going to put the people of America in jeopardy again by disarming this Nation too far and too fast?

Will we ever learn from our great first President, George Washington, who made the statement, "The best way to keep the peace is be prepared for war," not overly prepared, but adequately prepared, that we can handle any contingency that may happen.

I submit to the American public that we are not there and we are going too far and we will rue the day we do that, just as we did at the First World War, the Second World War, the Korean War, the Vietnam War, and you name it. Let us be cautious as Members of Congress who are making these policy decisions. Let us be cautious that we do not disarm this military to the point we can't bring it back.

Do you realize how fast we could build P–51's, DC–3's, B–17's, and B–24's. Well, you can't do it now. There is no way we can build like we did during those times. Now we will have just what we have got, and those 50 poisonous snakes worry me, Mr. Speaker, and they should worry the American public. We should be very cautious and very prudent as we start this builddown and not go as fast as we have in the past.

I thank my friend from Georgia for yielding to me.

Mr. KINGSTON. I thank the gentleman from Utah.

I wanted to touch base on two of the things you pointed out. I have read during the course of this year "The Last Line," part II, by William Manchester, which is a biography of Winston Churchill, and the book actually took place from about 1920 to 1939.

During that period of time, of course, Churchill fell from grace in the English Parliament. Really he was one of the most hated men in England during that period of time. What he was hated about was he kept saying we are not preparing, we are disarming too fast and meanwhile, Germany, yes, Germany of all places, is rearming, and they are building, and they are getting prepared for a war. They are going to be a world power.

Nobody believed him. History shows Churchill was ridiculed, laughed at, and scorned. Yet, he stood steadfast, and because of those beliefs, he was able to become Prime Minister and lead England successfully through World War II. But he was out there crying in the wilderness alone.

Mr HANSEN. If the gentleman will yield, it is interesting to me you would bring that up, because that is another classic example in world history. When Chamberlain, the Prime Minister of England, talked to Hitler about whether or not they were going to Czechoslovakia, and Chamberlain came back and told the English people all is well, we have it worked out, he was cheered all over England.

But a voice of reason and understanding, Winston Churchill, stood up and was booed off the House floor, the House of Parliament. And yet in a short time, did Hitler live up to what he said he would do? Surely not. He walked right into Czechoslovakia, and the next thing we knew we were in it up to our ears. That man that had the courage to be the voice of reason when everyone wanted to believe differently, stood up, took the flak that he had to take, and later, as you pointed out so ably, became the Prime Minister of England and was the man who gave the inspiration to all of the world when he talked about we will fight in the streets, we will do all this type of thing.

Churchill was an amazing individual. In fact, in his last talk that he ever gave to Parliament, he stood before them and all he said is never give up. Never, never give up.

I cannot say it the way he would say it, of course, but that is a good thing for all Americans to look at also as we look at the roots that we have from England.

And I am interested in what you said about him, because he was one great leader, and probably someone we should all emulate and should think about it and cautiously think about it as we, here as Members of Congress, who are studying the policies, setting the money for what is going to happen with the defense of America, should never forget those great lessons of history from people such as him.

Mr. KINGSTON. I think the gentleman is correct. I have heard it said many times that while the United States cannot afford to be the policeman of the world, if there is to be one, let it be the United States, because we have always been a peace loving nation and have never used our military power to invade other countries, as history shows many other countries do when they have that advantage.

The gentleman from California is here and has great knowledge and expertise on military topics. If I could yield to him.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my friend from Utah, who is one of the leaders on the Armed Services Committee, because what you have said needs to be said at townhalls throughout this Nation. Instead of the news media focusing on some of the juicier aspects of Government and politics, they need to be looking very seriously at what we are doing with our defense apparatus, this dismantlement we are going through, and address it.

Let me take some of the statements that you have made and talk a little bit about some specific things.

First, the threat has changed. I think we all concur in that. The former Soviet Union is now broken down into States. The problem is that the four States of Belarus and Kazakhstan and Ukraine and Russia that came out of the Soviet Union, those four States at least retained nuclear weapons. And it is at times the ownership of the pink slip of those nuclear weapons is somewhat in doubt, and the political leadership is a very fragile political leadership in those four States. I think that those nations are understanding now, I think they have always known instinctively, but they are understanding now that the ownership of those nuclear weapons gives them prestige and gives them leverage.

In looking at the Nunn-Lugar moneys, the moneys that we have appropriated in Congress to dismantle some of those nuclear weapons, we notice that the schedules are dragging and dragging and dragging. We keep asking in Armed Services, when are they going to dismantle the nuclear weapons aimed at us? The answer is, sometime in the future. But we tend to have a few problems with moving this process down the line.

I think the delay is caused by the fact that these nations understand there is a certain prestige attached to these weapons. I think it is going to be a long time before they are dismantled. But beyond the Soviet threat, we have North Korea obtaining nuclear capability. We understand that. We also understand that there is very little we can do about it, according to our experts who say we cannot make a clean scalpel-like attack, surgical strike on the nuclear apparatus, the nuclear development apparatus of North Korea, like the Israelis made on the Iraqi nuclear reactor, because they have underground facilities. It is very complex. It is difficult to tell exactly what is going on and where. And our intelligence apparatus has not penetrated the Korean peninsula well, everyone understands that. And so we have problems with stopping this development.

When you are dealing with the brutal leadership of North Korea, we have discovered that the fine print and the excellent, eloquent statements of our diplomats have little effect on their military machine and on their nuclear development operation.

So you have nuclear weapons being acquired by an instable regime that is dependent on the personalities of a few people.

In the South China Sea, you have Communist China now claiming a great deal of territories, understanding that there is some wealth in the South China Sea, moving into the South China Sea with strength, building warship bases and warplane bases in the Sea.

In the Balkans, of course, we have the situation that most Americans who watch CNN are aware of. The Balkans continue to explode. And in the Middle East we have a continuing, dangerous situation. And overlaying all of these threats around the world, we have now a stampede among the Western nations to proliferate high technology, what is known as dual-use technology. That is machinery and technology that can be used on the domestic side to make plant and equipment for domestic manufacturing operations but also be used on the military side to build the military machines that at some point may meet young Americans on the battlefield and kill them. That is militarily critical technology, and I am reminded that when we found the skull furnaces that had been shipped by the United States to Saddam Hussein before the Iraq conflict, and we looked up the documentation that came out of our Department of Commerce, they had stamped on that documentation for these skull furnaces, which were used by Hussein in his nuclear weapons development program, very critical parts, they had stamped on those documents that they were going to be used by the Iraqi people to make prostheses for amputees.

Of course, our Department of Commerce bought that particular explanation. The point is that even with that illustration, the United States is the most conservative Nation of all the nations in the Western democracies with respect to shipping high technology to our potential adversaries.

We now have a stampede, a flood by Great Britain, by France, Germany, Japan, by many others to sell military critical technology, technology that is equivalent to selling Winchesters to the hostiles, to our adversaries. It is no longer just a thin hemorrhage around the world. It is a flood of technology.

So overlaying all these threats that we have in Korea, with respect to China, with respect to the former Soviet States, with respect to the Middle East, and with respect to what I guess you would call the usual suspects, Libya, Iraq, and others, you have overlaid on this proliferation of killing technology that is currently at flood stage.

We have a very dangerous world. And against this threat, the Clinton administration is reducing national security by $127 billion. This was last year's baseline, $127 billion below what George Bush cut out of defense of $50 billion. So this is $177 billion below what we figured in 1990, we would need for national defense.

We have cut our fighter forces 50 percent. We have cut our bomber forces by 33 percent in just a few months. We are now reducing our 600-ship Navy. It was almost 600 ships a few years ago. It is a little bit above 300, massive reductions taking place right now.

We are cashiering 600 young people a week out of the military, taking the uniform off these people, putting them back in the private sector and praying that the world is going to be stable.

I think, to the gentleman from Utah and my good friend my Georgia, I think we are approaching what George Marshall described, after World War II, when somebody said, what do you think about the demobilization, General? He said, "This is not a demobilization; it is a rout."

Of course, we know that shortly after that rout took place in the most powerful army in the history of the world, the United States military was down to such a level that when we were challenged in Korea, we were unable for many months to meet the challenge.

Mr. KINGSTON. I wanted to relate a old hunting story. We were talking about selling technologies to our suspected enemies.

There is a great and illustrative joke, the story of a hunter who was out hunting when it was cold. He found a frozen snake, and he took the snake home with him. And he heated the snake up by the fireplace and gave him a little water, fed him a mouse. And the snake, sure enough, revived and got alive again.

Then one day the man was moving the snake's water dish and the snake bit him. And the hunter said, I do not understand this. I took you in. You were fed. You were frozen. I thawed you out. I fed you, gave you water. The snake shrugged and says, you knew I was a snake.

I think that is what we forget in America. Often we think that we can kill our enemies with kindness when, in fact, you cannot reform people who do not want to be your ally. Yet time and time again, we do sell furnaces or other sort of technology to the people who will be after our very own citizens in one form or the other one day.

Mr. HUNTER. I think my friend is right. He has made a wonderful illustration with this story.

My only problem with that story is, I think it is very difficult for me to imagine how a snake shrugs.

Mr. KINGSTON. You people in California do not have very big snakes. We will get you to Georgia sometime.

Mr. HUNTER. You have those broad-shouldered snakes in Georgia.

Let me bring out one other thing that I think is important for us to remember. That is, as Leo Thorsness, who was a POW for many years in North Vietnam and a Medal of Honor winner, said, he said in areas of national defense, if you are going to make a mistake in budgeting, err on the side of strength.

And what I think the American people were so grateful for during Desert Storm was when Colin Powell said, we are going to destroy the Iraqi Army, the fourth largest military in the world, with overwhelming force.

So we met that military with overwhelming force, and we took around 100 casualties, that is KIA, killed in action, 100 casualties.

Somebody was comparing that to the number of people who were killed in drive-by shootings in Washington, DC, during the same period of time. I think there were more people killed by drive-by shootings in the drug wars in Washington, DC, than were killed during Desert Shield and Desert Storm on the battlefield in Iraq.

The reason we were able to prosecute that war and cut off Saddam Hussein before he cut the oil lifeline that the West depends on, the reason we were able to do that was because we had overwhelming strength. This was not an even match.

In technology and in quantity and in quality of systems, we had overwhelming strength.

We are now cutting back to where our analysts are coming in, like those from the General Accounting Office and the Budget Office, who told us the other day in the Committee on Armed Services, "We think we can win these wars on what we are going to have." I asked him, "Did you take into account casualties?" "No, we did not take into account casualties."

I just want to give two situations and ask you to compare them. At Antietam, just a few miles from here, where Robert E. Lee invaded the North during the early part of the Civil War, went across the Potomac and took on McClellan's army at Antietam Creek, the battle forces of the South and the North, considering the geographical proximity or the geographical location that Lee set up in, were fairly, fairly even. There was rough parity. The North had more people but the South had a geographical—because they sat up on a ridge near Antietam Creek, they had the edge in terrain and topography, and they were set up in a fairly strong position when the North struck them.

Because both sides were evenly matched, it was a fierce, grinding struggle. In a matter of about 10 hours, 33,000 Americans were either killed or wounded. The cornfield, if you go to Antietam Creek and you stand there and you let the ranger brief you on that battle, and you are standing there at the headquarters of Antietam battlefield, he will show you where the cornfield was, the famous cornfield which was taken and retaken by both sides, until it had switched possession six times. At the end of that carnage, you could walk all the way across the cornfield on bodies.

We took 33,000 casualties, North and South, in that battle, because there was an evenness of forces; because there was not overwhelming superiority on one side or another.

Compare that with our fight in Desert Storm, where we beat the fourth-largest army in the world and took about 100 men killed in action. The facts are that having overwhelming force is much better for your young men and women in uniform, because it protects them, it allows them to get the job done quickly without taking massive casualties, and it does not turn your operation into a long, grinding battle that wears you down and results in body bag after body bag being shipped home.

Mr. HANSEN. Will the gentleman yield on that?

Mr. HUNTER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. HANSEN. I think my friend from California has brought up a very interesting point, talking about the Civil War in the United States of America.

As we go back and look at the history of that, it was a grisly, mean, dirty, bloody affair, and we lost literally thousands and thousands of our people.

Now we look at the thing today, as we talked about, the kind of wars we could look at. The gentleman brought up the idea of weapon proliferation, talking about ethnic, religious wars, problems we have probably not faced at other times, and the gentleman has used a good example which I appreciate the gentleman used, what happened in Iraq.

At this point, the big, fourth-largest military might on the face of the Earth moved into Kuwait. It was a war of aggression, much like during the Second World War, when Hitler's Germany moved into Czechoslovakia, France, Scandinavian countries.

At that point people wanted to push them out. It was the anticipation, get them out of our country. They have occupied something that is not theirs.

It is interesting the gentleman brings up the Civil War, a different kind of war. In Vietnam, what did we have on our hands? We had a civil war on our hands. When you talk to people who were Vietnam veterans, they did not know who was wearing the white hat, who was the right person, a very difficult type of war to get in. Korea was another civil war. Ours was a civil war. The history of civil wars is that they are very tough to win.

Now as we look at what we may face now, these are not easy wars, and I'm not saying the Persian Gulf was easy, but we knew those people did not have their hearts in it. Look how they surrendered.

Look at the problems with Bosnia and these areas. Look at some of the problems that could come up. What you have alluded to is another one of these tough wars to fight, much more, even with the overwhelming odds because they had people fighting for God, country, and mother, so to speak. It is not one of those things where they are mercenaries.

There is another point that I believe even requires a higher degree of training, a higher degree of preparedness, than having the technology and the overwhelming odds that we have. It is a sin almost in my mind to see the technology that we have perpetuated in America, which has been the leading edge of why we have been ahead and in my opinion why the cold war ended, is the technology of America. To see that taken apart and eroded is to me one of the biggest mistakes we are seeing in America at this particular time.

Mr. KINGSTON. If the gentleman will yield, I think one of the things we are saying is that yes, it is efficient to swat a fly with a sledgehammer when you are talking about saving lives. That is how the American military has been successful throughout the years.

Mr. Speaker, we have a couple of other things we wanted to talk about, but I don't want to cut the gentleman short, but just encourage him to maybe sum up.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman from Georgia, and I thank him for letting my friend from Utah and I talk a little bit on his time in this special order.

Let me just finish by saying this, Mr. Speaker. The airlift that we have undertaken over Bosnia has now been carried on longer than the Berlin airlift. This is another aspect of military operations and military requirements in this so-called peaceful period. We have now carried that airlift on longer than the Berlin airlift.

Our military operations over Iraq have now been carried on longer and we have had more military operations over Iraq, aircraft operations, than we had during the Iraq war, so the so-called period of peace following the war has been more stressful on our air wings than the war itself.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we have gone down in President Clinton's defense budget, we are cutting down on the number of new aircraft that we procure to the point where if we compare what we did in the 1980's, when we had in naval air, for example, we had about 5,500 aircraft, and that includes fixed-wing aircraft, fighters, attack planes, bombers, and it includes helicopters.

We replaced those aircraft with replacement budgets each year of in excess of 300 aircraft, or roughly about 18 to 1. That means for every 18 aircraft we had in our inventory, whether on the decks of our carriers or in our air bases, for every 18 aircraft in inventory we would buy at least 1 new aircraft every year.

We have cut back so far on replacing those aircraft, on replenishment inventories, that we are only going to replace this year at the ratio of about 1 to 100, so we are replacing them at five times lower rates than what we were replacing them during the 1980's. That means we are aging our naval air force.

That means that instead of replacing those 1965 Chevys with new models, we are going to go ahead and get along with the 1965 Chevys for a few years longer. That means that when we have that conflict that the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN] talked about, and it might be a civil war, it might be something along the lines of Desert Storm, it could be an ethnic problem, but when we have to meet that conflict, we are going to have much older aircraft than the modern aircraft that we were able to prosecute Desert Storm with.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank the gentleman from Georgia for allowing us to use a little of his time and be a voice in the wilderness in what some of us feel very strongly about.

Mr. KINGSTON. I appreciate the gentleman's leadership in defense matters.

I wanted to touch on some health care topics, and particularly, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to talk about the impact of health care on small businesses and the family. I think it is so important that we talk about the family more.

We had this great debate today on school prayer. I was glad to be here for that. It is very important. I was glad it was a healthy debate on school prayer. The central theme behind that debate was, will this make life better for our students and our families, and will we be getting back to maybe some better values as a country?

I think one of the things that we need to do in America is assess our tax system as respects the family. A statistic that I fell across the other day has just shocked me. That is that in the 1950's, the average American family paid, as part of their income, 2 percent taxes in Federal income tax, so part of the average family income, 2 percent went to Federal income taxes. Today that same average family pays 24 percent.

During that period of time, Mr. Speaker, the family time spent with each other has actually decreased about 37 percent. Now I'm not sure how that statistic actually has been studied, but I think the fact is that everyone we talk to is busy: The mom works, the dad works, they are rushing around here and there, they are trying to catch planes and go on trips and so forth.

And yet, is our quality of life any better than it used to be, are we spending more time with our children? No. If we do not spend more time with them, we do not impart our values and I am afraid if this health care plan passes with its $400 billion price tag that it will just be one more massive tax on the middle class who cannot afford it anymore.

I am very concerned that in the health care debate we are forgetting the tax formula as it hits the middle class, because if we look at it statistically, Mr. Speaker, the folks who have the traditional families as much as Hollywood and some of our pseudointellectual think-tank types hate to admit it, the traditional families have the fewer dropouts, the fewer drug problems, the fewer DUI's for their children. We need to do anything we can to promote and encourage that traditional family unit, and I think making the tax system more friendly toward them will keep families together.

I am going to also say this is not unique to the middle class. If you look at what we are doing for the folks in the lower social and economic levels particularly those who are on welfare, we are absolutely murdering them. We do not even let the dad get near the house because if we do we cut off all of the benefits, push them off the economic cliff and they cannot survive.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. I know the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. TAYLOR], has some important comments on this so I will not take long. But the one statement the gentleman just made about the so-called Great Society and the progeny of the Great Society which are all of these programs that are supposed to help people are something I have often reflected on because as a young lawyer in San Diego County I remember going to the presiding courtroom of the superior court and the municipal court and watching fathers be sent out for trial, for criminal trial on the basis that they had been caught by a neighbor or seen by a neighbor slipping back into their own house. And that was a function of this, the great welfare system that was a function of this, the great welfare system that was built initially under Lyndon Johnson, that said that people got more money if the father was not around, and as a result of that, you had families that purposely stayed apart or gave the image of staying apart, the impression of staying apart so they could receive more money. It was human nature to do everything you could possibly do once you have been seduced by the great welfare system from Washington to accommodate that welfare system. You do everything possible to get the most money possible.

So as a result, instead of Lyndon Johnson's pride and joy, the Great Society welfare programs, bringing families together, they ended up splitting families apart because they gave them an economic incentive for the father to be gone and ultimately the father would be, if he was caught slipping back into his own house to see his own wife and children, he would be criminally prosecuted. And I have wondered often how many families were broken up permanently because they made that initial separation on the basis that they could get more sugar from Uncle Sam, more money from Uncle Sam if they would just split up. The gentleman is right on point when he mentioned that fact.

Mr. KINGSTON. I will give the gentleman a statistic that has been proven. Ninety-two percent of the children on AFDC or basically welfare do not have a father at home. Listen to this: 35 percent of the children in Washington, DC, are on AFDC, 28 percent in New York City, 24 percent in Chicago, 19½ percent in Los Angeles, and the national average is 13 percent. And that is because our tax policies and our benefit policies have attacked the family, and particularly in these cases the family in the lower socioeconomic levels.

There is a bill pending right now which I am a cosponsor of, which is a rent control bill that actually allows the father to move back into the housing project and does not kick the family out, because we have got to rebuild the family before we can get folks off welfare, and this is an issue which is bipartisan. And I am proud to say that there is so much agreement between the Democrats and Republicans on it, to me there is no reason why this should be back burner stuff. We should be debating this and moving this through the Congress before recess, because it is that important to the security of our Nation. But there is so much bipartisan agreement on it.

I know the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. TAYLOR], wants to say a word and I am happy to yield to him.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. I appreciate the gentleman from Georgia having this special order and giving time. I was interested in his comments about small business and how the health care bill, the Clinton health care program will impact small business. I think most of us recognize that mandates that will be placed on small business, if that legislation passes, will kill a lot of small businesses. About 95 percent of the jobs in my district are tied to small business, and we feel that, in fact I have had business after business tell me they cannot sustain that kind of cost.

Now I know Mrs. Clinton said we cannot afford to be concerned about these under capitalized small businesses. I think that is the way she put it. But we have to recognize that everything from Apple Computer to Coca Cola started in someone's back yard or in their garage and became a small business. That idea was developed. As it proved to be an idea that served people, it grew into a large business, and that is how most large businesses become large, they start as small businesses, are allowed to grow and become successful and then provide more and more jobs and more and more benefits as they are able to do that. There are few businesses that start as major businesses, few companies in this country start this way.

I know the President has been in Detroit with the job summit worrying about creating more jobs and strengthening the economy. That was the base of his whole campaign. It is a worthwhile goal that many of us want to work toward. But, he has lost his compass in that direction. It is the Government that is creating the problem for small business. I cannot tell you the hours and hours I spend and the horror stories I hear of the Government, the onerous hand of Government and the damage it is doing to our small businesses, going far beyond the basic public health and safety protection, going far beyond the basic consumer protection. It reaches out, Government does, to be more and more intrusive until the point that it kills the patient altogether.

Mr. KINGSTON. If the gentleman will yield, what we are hearing from our small businesses in the first district of Georgia, if they have to pay 80 percent of the health care for their employees they will eliminate jobs starting with the part-timer, and the lower wage, which in my opinion are the people who need the work the most and need to have that opportunity, and they will raise their prices and when you draw that back one more time what will it do with the family. It will probably eliminate more, it will reduce the number of jobs available to the second wage earner and when you go to the grocery store, the restaurant, the dry cleaners, wherever, your goods and services that you purchase will be more.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Yes. How will we have served the people in this country is they lose their job? Then they will have neither health care nor a job. And I do not see how we move people ahead with that kind of draconian action.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield on that point. The gentleman is one of our experts as a successful businessman, one of the real experts on the cause and effect of Government policies on business. And you know I have two cents' worth from California. The liberal leadership in the legislature in the State of California decided that they were going to do a wonderful thing for working people in California, and that was to put into place the most expansive, all encompassing Workmen's Compensation program on the face of the earth. I am talking about a Workmen's Compensation program that allows you to sue for stress and has very lenient guidelines in proving stress.

Well let us look at what happened with that Workmen's Compensation program. It passed. This was supposed to help the workers. Liberals around the world celebrated when this thing passed and as a result of that you had a steady exodus of businesses leaving the State of California, going not just to Mexico, but to Arizona, Nevada, Texas, all other States which are considered to be business-friendly, and it is my understanding that now if you rent a U-Haul going back to California, instead of leaving California, you can get a very good deal, because no businesses are coming in. And I have talked to colleagues who serve in this Chamber, who have said to me, "DUNCAN, we hate to say it, but we are on another raid in California; you have so many businesses out there to whom government has dealt a killing blow that they cannot wait to come to our States and we are going out with our chambers of commerce, our city fathers and we are going to go bring your businesses to our States. So here is an example of the welfare state attitude, the liberals in Congress doing something that they thought was good for workers, and in doing so, they deprived the workers of their most precious possession, their job."

Mr. KINGSTON. I want to speak on the State of California and this whole issue of really mandates on employers, because that is what we are talking about. It is not the 80/20 split. It is just one more mandate, more Government intrusion.

But there was a great movie several years ago called Billy Jack, and I have got to tell you my anecdote, but one of the lines was that Billy Jack came up to one of the bad guys and said, "You know what, Duncan," and I am going to pick on you, "I am going to put my right foot on your right cheek, and you know something else," he said, "No," he said, "there is nothing you can do about it." I will say this, having studied the fact that you all passed that work comp allowing stress, the fact that you have a 700-percent increase in claims and that your permitting process when businesses want to add on, sometimes they have to go through 25 local agencies and 35 State agencies and seeing what they have to go through, to raid California right now as an outsider, it is fruit like California oranges is ready to pick, because your business climate, in my opinion, has been ruined by Government taking fish out of the water to keep them from drowning.

Mr. HUNTER. The gentleman is exactly right.

Just one last thing with respect to regulations put together by Government, we had one company, a great aerospace company that tried, it took 3 years for them to get a permit to increase their factory size in San Diego County. They went to Arkadelphia, AR, and they got a permit to build a 500,000-square-foot manufacturing facility in 3 weeks. What they could not get in their own hometown in 3 years they were able to get in 3 weeks in another State. That is the story of big Government ruining California.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. You were mentioning California. We are happy to accept in North Carolina those companies that leave.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us not get too quick to take all of our businesses. We are going to come back. We are going to elect Republicans and they are going to slash regulations and bring businesses back to California.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. The problem is we in this body nationally are creating those same problems for every State in the Union.

Of course, in my district, I see companies going to Mexico for that reason. We lost Ball Manufacturing. It said, "We are going to Mexico. We are making it a lot cheaper." We had Eaton Corp. that announced much the same thing. We may lose a portion of our Gruber Manufacturing for the same thing. We are creating more joblessness because of these regulations.

It is not just the disparity in wages. Our workers can outproduce and take up that slack of the difference in wages, but the businesses themselves, nor the workers, can make up the difference for these onerous regulations that keep piling on and piling on. There is no way they can make up that difference in cost.

So we are losing outside the country.

I want to cite just two or three areas just to tell people what we are talking about rather than just talking in generalities.

Let us talk about the Superfund sites. Now, that is up for renewal in this legislature, in this Congress, this year. It may go over to the next Congress, but it is up this year to be renewed. It should have been named the Lawyers' Relief Act, because the study over the last 15 years shows that of the sites that were listed as critical sites to be cleaned up, only about 20 percent have been cleaned up. There are still 80 percent of the sites that were there 15 years ago.

It also showed that almost 80 percent of the funds went for lawyers' fees, did not go toward what folks would be talking about cleaning up actual chemical spills or other problems. It went for litigation, and it went into a fund, or it went into lawyers, whether they were defending, whether they were prosecuting. It was strictly a legal mechanism.

In the legislation itself which totally overlooks the ex post facto law, in my district I can tell you a story of a situation some 25 years ago. We all know batteries were being tossed in the creek or on the side of the road for people to get rid of them. We did not have a collection process. Some of the local service stations and the recycling salvage dealers there decided, let us collect these things up and send them away to be recycled. That takes them out of the creeks, that takes them out of the public for any damage they would do. They did it. They would urge people to bring old batteries to their service stations and they would come by and pick them up.

This was the best environmental move at that time. There was no law against it at that time. They would ship them to central sites, and that central site would break them down and salvage the components of the batteries that could be reused.

In the early 1980's after Superfund passed, they said, "You know, the contents of these batteries may create spills." Now, there is not a great deal of scientific evidence that this is a deadly site. It could pollute in certain circumstances. And so these areas that were used as breakdown points for those batteries were declared Superfund sites.

Now, the stations and the recycling centers in my district stopped when the law said this might be a problem.

Twenty-five years later now in my district one of the central sites, the gentleman who the site was declared a Superfund site, they first said it is an $80 million Superfund site, and so they allowed him to plead to a $15,000 fine if he would list the names of all the people that had sent in batteries over the last 25 years.

Now small dealers, small salvage companies have fines on them anywhere from $200 to a million and a quarter dollars for doing what was legal at the time they did it, for doing what was best for the environment at the time they did it and totally disregarding the ex post factor protections in our Constitution, and these people are now facing, small family companies, small businesses, are facing total ruin for doing what was best at the time and totally legal at the time.

Now, when Government can reach out and do that, think of the chilling effect it puts on any business to make any positive move or to try to do anything in the area of business.

In the area of pesticides, we had in the late 1950's a bill passed in this Congress, and I think it was 1957, called the Delaney clause. It said that any technical amount of a carcinogen found on a fruit would render that fruit out of the market. It would have to be destroyed and could not be sold in the market.

At that time the detection had large amounts of pesticides were all that could be detected, and you could not detect small amounts. Today you can detect up to 1 quadrillionth of an amount.

There is more of the same chemical in the skin of the fruit than there is pesticide that might be detected on the fruit. And yet now we have the Delaney clause holding up in my district, and it happens to be a fungicide, there is a question whether or not it is a carcinogen, but without the use of it, our Red Delicious apple trees are dying, 60 percent of the crop.

Most of our small farmers will be wiped out unless something is done. The FDA and the EPA, sitting in my office, both say this is not a public health and safety question. They recognize there is more danger, if there is danger at all, in the skin of the fruit than there is on the pesticide. And yet this onerous bureaucratic regulation is there now going to destroy thousands of our farmers and take out of circulation a very valuable commodity, I think, for the American people, if you follow the old adage that an apple a day keeps the doctor away. We are not going to be having many Red Delicious coming out if we do not do something about the Delaney clause.

Here again, it is one of a long list of ways that we have piled on regulations. It seems to operate along the candy theory. You know, if a piece of candy is good, a pound will be better, and a ton will be wonderful. We all know that a piece may be good, a pound will make you sick, and a ton will kill you, and that is what happens with the regulations. Jefferson said that Government is best that governs least, not that it does not govern at all.

There are needs in our product safety and our food laws and other areas for certain regulations, but as they continue to spread and become counterproductive, it kills our small businesses, and that is what is happening.

I think both of you gentlemen are on a piece of legislation that we have that would require regulations that are promulgated after a bill is passed to come back to Congress for those regulations to be approved by the Congress before they go out to the public.

We had 70,000 pages of those regulations come out of this body last year that small business is now having to live under and having to try to survive under, and I cannot imagine that anyone in this body, nor anyone with a small business, nor anyone else out there, knows what those 70,000 pages of regulations say.

I was on the plane coming in this morning, and two lawyers were going to the regulators today, because they said the regulators did not even know; that the numbers of regulations had so surpassed them they did not even know what the regulations were anymore, and here lawyers were having to go down, and they will be sitting there talking about what is coming out in such abundance that they cannot be kept up with.

Mr. KINGSTON. On the subject of regulation and Government overkill, I understand right now the average family pays about $4,000 a year more in all total goods and services purchased simply because of the additional cost of regulation, anywhere from, you know, filling out forms to putting in new guardrails on machinery. Some of it is good. Some of it is simply overkill and bureaucracy.

One of the things in the health care bill that people need to know about in this 1,342-page document is that if you have a friend who is a physician and you go straight to that physician because, say, they are in the same Sunday school class or kindergarten, you know the physician, and you say, "Tell me, Johnny has got a little sore throat. What can you do about it?"

☐ 2140

And right now this situation happens all over America. The physician says, "Look, here is a prescription. Go get it," or, "I have some stuff in my office. Have him take 2 or 3 of these and it will be OK." Now, that becomes a Federal law under this new health care program. That leaves you subject to a fine of up to $10,000. That is an example of more regulation, more Government coming into your life and destroying, once again, the family because the bureaucracy is now in the formula. The bureaucracy has now entered this kindergarten, and the bureaucracy is standing between little Johnny and that friendly doctor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia

[Mr. KINGSTON] for having this special order and talking about this threat. I think the health care bill that is before us represents a struggle between Government and freedom. I hope Government does not win this struggle, because I think that the health care bill is going to produce more $300 ashtrays—remember the $300 ashtray that the Defense Department produced; and the $600 hammer—they are going to produce more of those, more $300 health care ashtrays and hammers than the Defense Department ever thought of. We will end up with high-priced medicine. We will end up with very high-priced medicine. I think we will end up a lot like the Canadians. The Canadian system was ballyhooed for months in this Chamber by many Members of the House. They have kind of quieted down now because over December the biggest hospital in Ontario had to shut down because they ran out of money. I think that is the trademark of socialist system, they find out in the end people who do not care, Government bureaucrats, will never be able to produce systems as efficiently as people who do care, free individuals.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. In a health care forum I had a nurse from Canada stand up and testify as to how horrible the system was, how that she could not stand the fact that they could not take care of patients, could not apply medicine as she had been taught, they did not have the resources to do it. They had to watch people wait and die, in many cases, because of the rash nature of that system.

The gentleman said it—I think both the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] and from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] have hit the right thing. The McDermott, the Clinton, the Cooper bill, are all bills that believe that more Government, more of your tax money, more regulations, will do for health care a better system that what we have and an improved system in the world. On the other hand, there are those of us who recognize that there are problems in our health care system.

MOST-FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR CHINA SHOULD BE DENIED

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERSON of Florida). Under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss with my colleagues the subject of China.

As you know, recently Secretary Christopher made a trip there. I want to rise in support of the actions that he took on that trip. He very forthrightly presented the Clinton administration proposal. He delivered to the leadership in Beijing a letter, signed by 275 of our colleagues, which showed support for the Clinton administration Executive order basing renewal of most-favored-nation status on improvement of human rights in China.

This is an issue that has been before this Congress for a number of years. Last year we were poised to send a piece of legislation to the President of the United States. Instead, the President suggested an Executive order which, though our concerns include the trade imbalance with China, the proliferation and human rights issues, in the Executive order the President said that he would deal with proliferation and trade under the laws that we had in existence and that he would condition the renewal of MFN on the reasonable and achievable conditions contained in that Executive order.

Secretary Christopher brought that message to China. He had the support of the Members of this House of Representatives in doing so.

Tonight some of my colleagues have gathered here to talk about the trip, talk about the Executive order, and to talk about issues of our concern in our relationship with China.

My colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] has been patiently waiting. I know he is going to quickly take the floor to address the House on this issue of Secretary Christopher's trip.

Mr. Speaker, he has been a leader in the House of Representatives on many issues. A subject of particular concern to him where he has educated Members is on the issue of proliferation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Clinton administration has issued sanctions against China for the proliferation of weapons. Let me be very specific: The delivery systems to Pakistan. This is a very dangerous action on the part of the Chinese.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who, as I mentioned, has been a leader on this issue.

Mr. MARKEY. I thank the gentlewoman for having this special order, and I thank her for conducting it tonight. I again compliment her for her nationally and internationally recognized leadership on the subject of human rights in China.

You know, one of the problems that historically has been the issue of our relationship not only with China but also with the former Warsaw-bloc countries is that while we raise and sanctify a certain set of issues, human rights, and nonproliferation of weapons, as the ultimate primary objectives of our foreign policy, the truth of the matter is that we have always allowed those objectives to be subordinated to the short-term political or diplomatic agenda of a particular President or Secretary of State or Secretary of Defense.

Now, finally, Warren Christopher has made the decision that he will stand up on human rights, he will deal with the Chinese in a way which presents the American perspective on the subject.

And what do we hear from critics? We hear that it could jeopardize trade with China, it could jeopardize the economic or political short-term interests that we have with this country, and we, as a result, should be more careful, and the Secretary should be more careful if in fact the United States is not going to stand up for those principles which they believe in.

My belief is that the Secretary should be complimented, that rather than being undermined, he should be praised.

Just in the last week, we have learned that the Chinese have exported, just in the past year, 1 million semiautomatic military-style rifles into the United States. On average, they are selling on the streets of America for $100 to $130 apiece. So the very same Chinese Government which proliferates nuclear materials around the globe, which still engages in human rights abuses domestically within their own country, now we find that in addition to being the butchers of Beijing, they also are, in fact, leading a butchery on the streets of America; 1 million semiautomatic rifles, a very slight but important loophole constructed in a 1989 regulation set by the Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms Agency, which the Chinese Government is exploiting.

Now listen to this.

□ 2150

Who is running this trade into our country?

Interesting. It happens to be the Chinese secret service and the Chinese Army.

Where do the revenues for the sales go?

They go back to the Chinese secret service and to the Chinese Army for their use.

Now what a circle being constructed by these butchers of Beijing that now infects our society with 1 million assault weapons, and unless we close this loophole, by the way, we will see a proliferation of these weapons on the streets of our country.

My feeling is that we have to be honest with the Chinese, and we also have to be willing to walk away from some potential economic or political short-term benefits if, in fact, human rights and nuclear and conventional weapons proliferation is more important to our country, and I think that Warren Christopher is a good man who took American values and presented them to the Chinese Government in an honest way, and he needs to be praised, and I think that the Chinese Government should understand that to a very large extent the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] holds the balance of power in her hands with regard to how we are going to be handling our economic relationship with them over the next several years and that they should listen very carefully to her and to Warren Christopher as they tell that Government how important human rights and respect for human dignity is to the people of the United States of America.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] for his remarks. Certainly the dangers that he described in the export of these slightly modified AK-47 rifles poses a danger on the streets of America in addition to the danger from the proliferation of weapons worldwide. Our policy should be to make the trade fairer, the world safer, and the people freer. And so in terms of what he had to say about my role in all of this, Mr. Speaker, it is not my role. I have a great interest in it, but Congress, especially this House of Representatives, has been a bulwark of support for promoting democratic values, American values, but they are international values, not just American. And some of the issues that have built the coalition in this Congress are issues of proliferation, the issue of trade violations and the issue of human rights.

I am now pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] who is the Chair of the Tibetan Caucus in the House of Representatives. This is an issue of concern to many people in the House and Senate, and I thank him for his leadership on it and human rights, not only in China and Tibet, but throughout the world. So, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] for yielding to me, and I want to thank the gentlewoman for arranging this special order tonight. I commend her for her dedicated leadership on the issue of human rights in China and occupied Tibet.

Mr. Speaker, the New York Times ran a front page article today entitled, "Beijing Says It Could Live Well Even If U.S. Trade Was Cut Off." That article states that Communist China's Foreign Minister said this weekend that the importance of China's trade with the United States has been overstated, and that China was prepared to return to the cold war status of no trade relations with Washington if the dispute over China's human rights record could not be resolved. Mr. Speaker, if the Chinese Government does not make significant progress in human rights as defined by President Clinton's Executive order, then the Foreign Minister will have an opportunity to prove his point. Candidate Clinton took a very strong opposition against President Bush on this issue. As one of the many Republicans who did not support the former administration on MFN, I want this administration to know that many of us in the Congress will be very closely monitoring President Clinton's action on this issue.

It is difficult to perceive how the Chinese Government could be extended MFN again in June. If we look at only one of the previously adopted conditions, religious freedom for example, laid down in the administration's Executive order, it becomes apparent that the Clinton administration will have to be highly imaginative in certifying any progress in that area.

Religious worshipers in China and Tibet continue to suffer from government-sponsored persecution. In early February, China took its first reported action to enforce new rules aimed at stopping activities by foreign missionaries. It expelled seven overseas evangelists from Henan Province. Late last year, relatives of Bishop Stephen Liu Difen—after being summoned to pick up their uncle—found him lying unconscious in a hospital, where he died 3 days later. When they dressed his remains for burial, they were horrified to discover puncture wounds all over his body. Last year Bishop Joseph Fan of Hubei also died while incommunicado in administrative detention, and showed bruises on his body and injury to his legs.

Just a little over 1 month ago, Chinese authorities arrested three Catholic bishops, seven underground Catholic priests and seven evangelical house-church preachers. At least six of them have been sentenced to "reform through labor" for between 1 and 3 years, and at least five of these six sentences were handed down administratively—i.e., without trial or other due process guarantees. And, Christian Solidarity International reported last month that one of their pastors was recently killed by authorities in Hubei Province.

In Tibet, on February 12, nuns, including a 15-year-old girl, were given sentences of up to 7 years in prison for demonstrating in June 1993. In addition, in late February, the sentences of 14 other nuns who were already in prison were doubled and tripled for singing pro-independence songs in prisons.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, under these tyrannical conditions, if the Chinese Foreign Minister believes he can live without us, I believe the feeling in this Congress is mutual.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] for his very eloquent remarks and putting in perspective what the Chinese have at stake here. I think that the references that the gentleman has made to religious persecution are very important. They are important to the American people, and the list, as the gentleman knows, goes on and on both in China and in Tibet, and it is for that reason, and that is just one of the reasons, that we have very serious concerns about China making overall significant progress in meeting the conditions of MFN in an executive order relating to the Uniform Declaration of Human Rights.

Mr. Speaker, what we are asking China to do is almost everything is something they are a party to already. They were founders of the United Nations. They signed the Declaration of Human Rights, and it is that Declaration of Human Rights that we are asking them to respect. Their Constitution even guarantees some rights to their people, and it is that Constitution that we are asking them to respect in regard to accounting for prisoners arrested for speaking out peacefully at the time of Tiananmen Square and Democracy Wall.

I next, Mr. Speaker, will yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE]. He has been a relentless advocate in the Congress on the issue of Tibet. He has a personal friendship because of his leadership with His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, and he has educated the Members of this body and the country on what is happening there, and how we can ignore it I do not know. But suffice to say that His Holiness recognizes both the role of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE], and I hope that the American people will become more aware of the terrible tragedy that is Tibet and the opportunity that this executive order presents for improving that unfortunate situation.

So, with that, Mr. Speaker, I yield with great respect and admiration to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE].

□ 2200

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleague from California to commend the current administration and Secretary of State Warren Christopher for their firm and clear stand on human rights in China and Tibet. I will put the remainder of my comments in the RECORD.

But I want to make a few comments about the things that the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] said, along with many of her colleagues and my friend BEN GILMAN, who came here many years ago with me in the 93d Congress and who shares with me our concern about human rights in Tibet, and share an article recently in the Los Angeles Times by Mr. Fang Lizhi, the very prominent dissident that, after the Tiananmen Square massacre on June 4, 1989, took asylum in the embassy in Beijing and stayed there until the summer of 1990.

In this March 16 article in the L.A. Times, it says:

> As much as President Clinton may want to satisfy American businessmen and create jobs in a time of fledgling economic recovery, it would be shortsighted to sell East Asia down the tube in the bargain.

I am very optimistic about what I think the President is going to do. I really believe from conversations that I have had with him last week, and he did not tell me directly what he was going to do, with members of his Cabinet who feel very close to him, I believe our President is going to deny MFN status to China. Here we stand several months before that final decision, but I firmly believe if the decision were today, he would say no to a continuation of MFN.

When I go to Russia, my colleagues in the Russian Parliament say to me, "America preaches to us that we must have institutions of self-government in Russia before we can truly understand and learn the capitalist system." They say to me, "Why don't you say that to the Chinese? Why is it that you participate in vigorous trade with China, when they have the kind of dictatorship that they do in that country and not even the hint of Democratic self-government?"

It would be nice if I had a straight answer to give my friends in Russia, but the simple truth is that we are hypocrites. We see a market to exploit, American business sees opportunities to make a great deal of money with both an expanding market and with cheap labor, and the principles of Jefferson and Madison go out the window.

But the business community says to those of us who feel this way, that China is not deserving of MFN, why not do business with a country that needs our help and that needs us to buy things from them and to sell us things?

MFN is a gift from this country. It is a very special relationship with a nation that was founded over 200 years ago on the basic premise that our reason for being was to preserve freedom and liberty in a world that had little knowledge of freedom and liberty.

To me, standing up for human rights as a precondition to granting MFN to any country in the world is purely and simply a matter of being true to our roots, true to our heritage.

There is no other country on the face of this planet that has the same heritage about freedom and liberty that we have. When Lafayette went back to France after the revolution, he said to the world in a speech, "Liberty and freedom have found a home, and it is in America." And if Bill Clinton denies MFN, as I believe and hope that he will, in the absence of substantial progress in both Tibet and China in the area of MFN, Bill Clinton will be following the true course that this nation has always taken.

The Dalai Lama says that he is a simple monk, that he comes to us in American and asks that we understand the plight of Tibetans. I have said that this man has asked us to shine the light of freedom in his country of Tibet, and for us to stand up for our heritage.

Mr. Speaker and my colleague from New York, Mr. GILMAN, and my colleague from California, Ms. PELOSI, who believe as I do that human rights and America standing true and tall for tits heritage, are more important than making money off the backs of cheap worker labor. I thank you for this special order.

The gentlewoman from California [Mr. PELOSI], who has gone to the well time and time again, has gone to the President personally time and time again, who has gone to Cabinet members, friends that she has known for years time and time again when being social and nice, would be more pleasant, but who has spent her political capital on saying to the world, human rights in China must come before big business concerns. My hat is off to you, Ms. PELOSI. You are a beacon of honor, of dignity, of freedom and liberty for all of us to admire.

So Mr. GILMAN and I and you as well may have known His Holiness the Dalai Lama for many years, but I want to salute you tonight for your tireless effort in behalf of freedom and justice in China. I thank you for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join my colleague from California to commend the current administration and Secretary of State Warren Christopher for their firm and clear stand on human rights in China and Tibet.

Since the 1987 massacre of Tibetan demonstrators by Chinese occupation forces in Lhasa, Tibet, the United States policy of constructive engagement through trade has not yielded even the slightest improvement of human rights conditions in China or Tibet. United States business interests were the prime reason for not imposing MFN sanctions in 1987; as they were after the 1988 killing of scores of Buddhist protesters in Tibet's holiest shrine and the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre in which thousands of people were brutally destroyed by the so-called enlightened, modernizing, and trade-oriented leadership in Beijing.

Under the cover of constructive engagement with Beijing, many U.S. corporations collude with a Communist tyranny to exploit a workforce that lives without freedom, without a voice and without mercy. In the absence of decisive action to advance the cause of democracy in China, our investments only serve to bolster a regime that is in direct contradiction to the funding principles of our Nation.

My message today is that it is not President Clinton not is it Secretary of State Warren Christopher that deserve to be scorned. The Administration and many of us here in Congress wish to end tyranny; not to make excuses for Beijing or to ignore injustice. Those parties that deserve our condemnation are the Chinese Government which grossly abuses even the most fundamental human rights and those United States businesses entities which neglect human rights in their blind and unprincipled pursuit of the dollar.

Individuals who press for delinking MFN and human rights offer no real alternatives to bring about positive change in China. Since the 1987 massacre of peaceful Tibetan demonstrators, many United States business interests and their allies in Washington and Beijing have engineered a United States Government policy that has placed trade over human rights. For 7 years, this approach has failed. It is time to change our course of action with the Chinese Government. The future of Asia and the trade of the United States should be inextricably linked to the nurturing and development of human rights and democracy.

I fully support the decision by this Congress and by President Clinton to link China's MFN-trading status with substantial progress in human rights in China and Tibet. I commend the President for his faithful implementation of this policy and for the administration's strong stance with Beijing. Should June come without substantial human rights progress in China and without actions to preserve the culture of Tibet, I will support the President in his decision to revoke Beijing's preferential trade status.

[From the New York Times, Mar. 16, 1994]

STANDING UP TO CHINA

When dealing with China, it sometimes helps to see matters through Chinese eyes. As Beijing views it, a great power must always insist on being treated with due respect. To behave otherwise is to acknowledge inferiority and therefore to forfeit influence.

During Secretary of State Christopher's weekend visit to Beijing, Chinese leaders aggressively asserted what they see as the prerogatives of China. They deliberately humiliated America's highest-ranking diplomat by temporarily rounding up some of the country's most prominent dissidents, and by detaining several Western correspondents trying to report on the crackdown.

The purpose of the roundup was to prevent Mr. Christopher from hearing any independent views on the human rights issues he is required to evaluate before making a recommendation by June on renewing China's access to the most favorable American tariff schedules.

For the sake of a healthy U.S.-China relationship, Washington is now obliged to respond with equal firmness. To kowtow to Chinese bullying would be to repeat the mistakes of the Bush Administration, which squandered American influence by its consistent refusal to press human rights issues. That was what first provoked Congress to force annual showdowns over linking continuation of China's trade privileges to progress on human rights.

The Clinton Administration needs instead to be forthright about its continued determination to insist on human rights progress. It especially needs to dispel China's impression that it can exploit differences between various policy makers in the Administration, Congress and the business community. Such miscalculation can only increase the likelihood of a rupture both sides would prefer to avoid.

China, despite its pose of cool indifference, desperately needs the $20 billion hard currency surplus it earns from its trade with the U.S. to carry on with its ambitious economic development plans. And U.S. business frankly wants to maintain access to one of the world's largest and fastest-growing economies. For their part, human rights advocates recognize that China's continued economic growth and openness contribute to domestic pressures for more responsive, less dictatorial government.

Even so, the Clinton Administration has a clear right under international law, and an obligation under U.S. law, to link China's trade status to minimum human rights goals. The Administration has demanded nothing unreasonable or demeaning, for the most part asking only compliance with international agreements to which China already subscribes. Washington seeks an end to the export of goods produced by slave labor, freer emigration for relatives of exiles and detainees, humane and lawful treatment of prisoners, and respect for the cultural traditions of Tibet. On most of these issues it has not set rigid benchmarks but is looking for "overall significant progress."

The Administration can use the remaining two and a half months provided by last year's executive order to give China the greatest possible incentive to demonstrate progress. But Mr. Clinton must make clear that if Beijing continues to try to blow past the whole issue with deliberate human rights provocations, it will be making a very big mistake.

CALLING BEIJING'S BLUFF: PUT UNIVERSAL VALUES AHEAD OF TRADE

(By Fang Lizhi)

China's leaders have slammed the door from the inside and, unless the United States responds now with the revocation of most-favored-nation trade status, Beijing will see the United States as the "paper tiger" that Mao always said it was.

Failure to react to China's intransigence on human rights will show to the East what the failure to act in Bosnia has meant elsewhere. When push comes to shove, the West does not have the will to stand up for the values it purports to stand for.

That perception will be dangerous in the long run. Feeling free to flout human rights, develop its military might and sell weapons to the world in any way it sees fit, an economically powerful China will then pose a threat to the stability of all of East Asia.

By detaining and harassing dissidents on the eve of the visit by Secretary of State Warren Christopher, whose very purpose was to discuss human rights, China's rulers were trying to show their strength and demonstrate that they will not be bullied by the West. They were trying to show that they will not blithely surrender to a new hierarchy of the world order with the United States on top. When Chinese leaders ignored a U.S. plea several months ago not to test a nuclear device, thus upsetting a worldwide moratorium on testing, they were putting the United States itself to a test of wills.

Their affront to Secretary Christopher in recent days was another test of that sort, which they think they can get away with because of President Clinton's political troubles over the Whitewater scandal. China's rulers are banking on Clinton's perceived political weakness and America's commercial interests in trade with China to win their bluff.

Already, the argument is common in business circles that China is "different" from the West because of its Confucian culture and thus should not be subject to the same human-rights standards as the rest of the world. Well, Taiwan is a Confucian society and its human-rights record is far better than Beijing's.

The truth is that China's leaders, starting with Deng Xiao Ping, are more Leninist than Confucian. Their power is based not on learned authority or respect for elders, but on the brutal ideology of one-party rule.

No matter how open the market has become, China's communist rulers have not departed one iota from this principle. They fully understand that to allow the kind of freedom implied by the American pressure for human rights is a direct threat to their hold on power.

The other common argument against revoking MFN status for human-rights reasons is that greater trade with the United States will bring a more generalized prosperity to China and that, in turn, will be the basis for more widespread democratic practices. Here we need only remind ourselves that, in addition to the Leninist element, China's rulers are also invoking nationalism to protect themselves. And, as Japan and Germany bloodily illustrated in this century, nationalism plus economic might without human rights is not the road to democracy; it is the road to fascism.

Former President Richard M. Nixon has often said that good relations must be maintained with China because the West can be better heard talking quietly inside Zhongnanghai (the compound near the Forbidden City where China's leaders live and work) than shouting from beyond the Great Wall. That may have worked at some point in the past, and it may be true at some point in the future.

For now, though, China's leaders aren't listening to voices from either location. The best way to get them to listen is to revoke MFN status while maintaining diplomatic relations so that channels of communication remain open. We must remember that MFN status did not precede diplomatic relations. It was the other way around. First, Nixon met with Mao in the early 1970s; then, later on, MFN status was bestowed.

In the end, China will recognize its own interests and return to the table. To maintain MFN relations with China under the current circumstances is tantamount to letting up on the pressure. If that pressure is gone, China's leaders will do anything. Harassment of dissidents will be the least of their crimes.

From my perspective, the current confrontation between the United States and China is akin to the Cuban missile crisis during the Cold War. If the United States had not forced the Soviet Union to back down in Cuba, global stability would have been threatened. If the world wants stability in East Asia over the longer term, as that region becomes an economic powerhouse, China's bluff must be called today.

As much as President Clinton may want to satisfy America's businessmen and create jobs in a time of fledgling economic recovery, it would be shortsighted to sell East Asia down the tube in the bargain. What is at stake today is the future stability of East Asia and the credibility of the West in defending the values that are the essence of its leadership role on the world stage.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman for his very important remarks and kind remarks at the end. I accept any compliments from my colleagues on this issue on behalf of the congressional working group on China, of which my colleagues are members, and for the hard work that has been done, both Member to Member here and in working with some of the outside groups and in helping to get some people free who are in China.

One of the ones that Mr. ROSE mentioned, Fang Lizhi, is a great leader for democratic principles in the world. Working in this House of Representatives, I have the honor, as you do, Mr. Speaker, of being a colleague to many great people who care very much about our country and its values and its principles and its well-being. Sometimes on issues we have the opportunity to work with exceptional people in history even outside of this great body.

I must say, and I think my colleagues would share the view, that one of the great rewards of this effort that we have made is that we have been able to work with people who are colleagues not to us, but to our Founding Fathers, who with great courage have spoken out for democracy in their oppressive country and at risk to their personal security and in some cases to that of their families.

One such individual is Fang Lizhi. Mr. ROSE mentioned him in his remarks. He cited a recent op-ed that Prof. Fang Lizhi had in the Los Angeles Times. I would like to read from another part of his statement.

To reiterate, as Mr. ROSE said, Dr. Fang Lizhi is an astrophysicist who was in China. He and his wife were great leaders in the pro-democracy movement. At the time of Tiananmen Square they were sought by the Chinese authorities. They fled to the American Embassy where they received refuge. They remained there for over 1 year and then were expelled from the country. But through the good offices of the American Embassy, they were able to safely come to the United States.

Doctor Fang Lizhi is an astrophysicist, a highly regarded scientist. But in addition to that, he has advanced the cause of democracy, pro-democratic principles in China.

In his article he says, giving some advice, Prof. Fang Lizhi has taken the long view on the China issue, as I am sure President Clinton will do. In his article he said the Chinese do not think that we will live up to our values. Paper tiger, that is what Mao Tse-tung called us, and after Tiananmen Square, the butchers of Beijing referred to us again. They said we will not do anything. They are driven by money and they are a paper tiger when they want to talk about values and democratic ideals.

I quote Prof. Fang Lizhi when he says that perception will be dangerous in the long run. Feeling free to flout human rights, develop its military might and sell weapons to the world in any way they see fit, an economically powerful China will then pose a threat to the stability of East Asia, as Mr. ROSE mentioned.

It goes on to say:

> Although the argument in business circles is that China is different from the West because of its Confucian culture and thus should not be subjected to the same human rights standards of the rest of the world, the truth is that China's leaders, starting with Deng Xiaoping, are more Leninist than Con> fucian. Their power is based not on learned authority or respect for elders but on the brutal ideology of one-party rule. China's present leadership is a corrupt remnant left over from communism.

Mr. Speaker, it is a very interesting article, and I will read more from it in the days ahead.

I would also like to point out that I believe one of our colleagues has sent that out as a "Dear Colleague." Our colleagues should be aware of it. That is what Dr. Fang Lizhi says.

I would like to quote, because so much has been said about what the business community thinks about this issue and how the business community treated Secretary Christopher in Beijing. Frankly, I thought that the Chinese discourtesies to Secretary Christopher were appalling, but they were not surprising. It is a regular routine of the Chinese to be harsh in the beginning, mellow out a bit and then make sure that some communication takes place. Because, indeed, as Mr. GILMAN said, they do need access to our markets. If they want to pretend that they do not, they may find out just how much they do. But let us assume for a moment, and I know I am speaking for my own self, that we would all like to see most favored nation status renewed, but only if they meet the conditions of MFN.

I said the Chinese behavior was appalling. Equally appalling, if not more so, I believe, is the behavior of the business community in China, the United States Chamber in Beijing. While it is obviously perfectly appropriate for all of us to disagree on approach and tactic, we certainly had hoped at the very least as a courtesy to our Secretary of State, once he had been discourteously treated by the Chinese regime, that they would have stood by him in terms of the message he brought about human rights.

Would it not have been wonderful to see the American business community in Beijing say, while we disagree, Mr. Secretary, with the policy and the approach and the use of MFN, we want to remove all doubt from anybody's mind that we stand with you in advancing American values and promoting human rights. Our differences are not about that.

Instead, they chose to lecture the Secretary of State, and I thought in an inappropriate way.

Let me put the words in someone else's writings. There is a writer for the Los Angeles Times, Mr. Flanigan, a business writer for the Los Angeles Times. He writes:

> Right now China's leaders are pushing American companies to lobby the U.S. Government, and U.S. business seems a bit too ready to cooperate. Some of them lectured Secretary Christopher at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce at Beijing, criticizing his emphasis on human rights.

And he calls—this business writer for the Los Angeles Times, not this prodemocratic advocate, this business writer for the Los Angeles Times—he called that action "distasteful, disloyal and dumb."

"Aside from morality, there is good economic reason for U.S. emphasis on democratic reforms and human rights."

Mr. Speaker, I will include Mr. Flanigan's article in the RECORD.

Just a few days before Mr. Christopher arrived in Beijing, the Chinese engaged in a roundup of dissidents. One of the Chinese leaders very candidly said, at the end of Mr. Christopher's visit, we would not have rounded them up, if we thought you were not going to want to talk to them.

Here was an admission on the part of a Chinese leader that there was no cause to round these people up. They had not broken the law, but for fear that Secretary Christopher might speak with them and hear their view of what was going on in China. Anyway, my point is, Mr. Speaker, that just before Secretary Christopher got there, seven leading Chinese dissidents very courageously came forward and wrote a letter to the Beijing leadership expressing their concern about the rounding up of the other dissidents.

I believe that these seven dissidents who wrote the letter were encouraged by the Congress of the United States, by our President of the United States, and the visit of Secretary Christopher that the world was watching and that there was some sense of security in their coming forth with their message.

I also believe that they were encouraged by the actions of Wei Jingsheng who was considered the leading dissident in China. He served a long, long sentence for criticizing Deng Xiaoping. He was released a few months before his turn was up in order to make points, the Chinese readily admit, before the Olympic Committee vote on assigning the Olympics, which Beijing, as you know, wanted. And in their cynical act, they released him a few months sooner, but they rearrested him before Secretary Christopher came.

They have since released him, but I think that after serving nearly 14 years in prison for attempting to speak freely, for speaking his mind, it did not happen to be freely, because he went to jail for it, even after coming out of prison he still spoke about human rights and promoting democratic principles and criticized the regime. So he has been in and out of prison since even the last few months.

But anyway, these seven dissidents, as I say, encouraged by our position and by particularly Wei Jingsheng, that courageous man, they wrote a letter, an appeal and a warning from seven Chinese.

"The following is the text of a petition to the Government issued today by a group of Chinese intellectuals," and it is translated by the New York Times.

> So lately there have been many incidents in which people have been arrested or detained in Beijing and Shanghai for interrogation because of their ideas and their exercise of free speech. World public opinion has reacted strongly. People of insight who are concerned with the fate of the Nation and who are dedicated to the cause of our country's modernization are shocked, upset and worried. In looking at history, we find that modern civilization began when humans awoke to eliminating the ideological confinement of ancient and medieval dictatorship and to becoming aware that humans should have independent personalities and dignity and enjoy unalienable and inviolate basic rights, the first of which is freedom of ideas and speech. To talk about modernization without mentioning human rights is like climbing a tree to catch a fish. Two hundred and five years ago, the French Declaration of Rights of Man stated clearly that being ignorant, neglectful and disdainful of human rights is the sole cause of the general public's misfortune and corruption in government. China's history and reality have verified that long-standing truth.
> In the 1940's, with the victory over the fascists, it became common thinking for people the world over to diligently seek an end to preventing human rights. In 1948, the United Nations adopted the Declaration of Universal Human rights.

I depart from the letter for a moment to make the point, Mr. Speaker, that what we are talking about in Executive order and on this floor is not about inflicting American views on China. It is about the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the idea that we subscribe to that human rights knows no boundary. They are universal.

China, by the way, is a signatory to the declaration of human rights, as I mentioned earlier.

The letter goes on to list what those rights are, which are basically freedom of speech, religion, press, assembly, and the right of workers to organize.

> China was a founder of the United Nations, and is a member of the Security Council. It should be a pioneer in abiding by all United Nations conventions instead of a target of international blame because of the issue of domestic human rights.
> For this reason, we appeal to the authorities to bravely end our country's history of punishing people for their ideas, speeches and writings, and release all those imprisoned because of their ideas and speeches.
> We believe that only after human rights are respected and all rights of citizens are secure will society achieve true stability. Otherwise contradictions will intensify, causing unmanageable turmoil.

It was signed by seven intellectuals, seven dissidents in China. One of them, Xu Lianying, is a gentleman who translated the works of Albert Einstein. We are talking about some of the great minds of China, who understand that a society can only succeed if free inquiry is allowed to happen, and freedom of speech.

One of the tragedies in China is that many of these dissidents, when they are imprisoned and they have to sit on a stool for 14 hours a day and they are tortured and all of the rest, one of the reasons they are tortured is they will not tell their guards and torturers what they are thinking, so it is not only that you cannot speak freely when you are living in China, or you cannot exercise the right of freedom of the press or worship or assembly or the right of thought. They insist on knowing what you are thinking, so that they can try to change your mind.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a wholesome attitude, I think anyone would agree.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to—I think he will save this one until we get toward the end. Mr. Speaker, I just want to get back to where we started on this. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] for staying here. I know the hour is late.

I said earlier, very briefly, that how we got to where we are in these last couple of months before the President must make an announcement about China-MFN, many business people will say, "Everybody has MFN, so why should not China?"

First of all, everyone does not, and China does not unless by June 3 of each year the President requests a special waiver granting most-favored-nation status to China. This is because China is still considered a centralized economy, and part of our most-favored-nation status law has in it the Jackson-Vanik requirement. It is on the basis of that that we base the conditionality on human rights, improvement in human rights for the renewal of MFN.

Mr. Speaker, in the Congress of the United States, in both Houses, we have had overwhelming votes in support of conditioning MFN. In fact, we have votes in favor of revoking most-favored-nation status, but I think generally most people say we want MFN to continue if we can use it as leverage to improve the situation in China.

Mr. Speaker, however, President Bush vetoed the bill every year and we could not override on the Senate side. We always did on the House side, had the votes, but not on the Senate side; but nonetheless, always a strong, strong majority in favor of conditioning MFN.

Mr. Speaker, Senator MITCHELL on the Senate side, if I may refer to the Senate side, and I in the House, introduced the legislation last year. President Clinton preferred the executive order, and frankly it was a good idea, I think, that the administration had, because it gave us the opportunity to speak with one voice, the House, the Congress, and the administration, on a policy which contained reasonable and achievable conditions for the renewal of MFN. We must obey our law about Jackson-Vanik, freedom of emigration, and the laws prohibiting prison labor for export. Those conditions we could not weaken. They are American law, so they are "must meet" conditions.

In addition to that, the President's executive order said that China must make overall significant progress, which gives the President some latitude, and frankly the Chinese some latitude, too, to improve human rights in China and Tibet; specifically, that they should move toward abiding by the universal declaration of human rights of the U.N., of which they are signers; that they must stop jamming Voice of America, and they told Secretary Christopher on his visit that they were not intentionally jamming Voice of America but there were some technical difficulties that made the jamming happen, so hopefully we can work out those technical difficulties. That does not seem to be a big problem to the Chinese, as they said to Secretary Christopher. We will see in the implementation of removing the technicalities, the technical difficulties.

They have to cease to threaten the culture of Tibet, and one form that could take would be to agree to meet with His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, as he has requested. They said they do not want to talk to him about independence. Since I have been in the Congress, since 1987, he has been talking about autonomy, not independence, and many of us here who worked on the Tibet issue believe that there is progress to be made there that is reasonable and achievable.

It also talks about the—I mentioned the prison labor, but it talks about accounting for and releasing those people arrested in Tienenmen Square and Democracy Wall, while peacefully demonstrating. In addition to that, that relates to the declaration of human rights, because it talks about freedom of speech, press, religion.

My colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] very carefully and scientifically spelled out some of the harsh penalties and the violations of people's right of freedom of worship in China, as I said earlier. That is part of it. We cannot go into all of it in one special order, but it is a very, very, very—an issue of concern to many people in the Congress, whether they are—of whatever denomination, as well as the repression of the Buddhist priests and nuns in Tibet.

The point is that the conditions in the most favored nation are reasonable and achievable. That is why they are in there. If they were not achievable, it would be cynical to put forth an executive order that said, "We are putting forth conditions which are not achievable." We purposely designed our bill, calibrating it for renewal, and the President took some of the conditions that we had and put in the bill. As I mentioned earlier, he wisely put the trade issues and the proliferation issues in a separate category, where he said we would forcefully enforce our laws on that.

Even though they are not part of the conditions of the bill, they were part of the text of the executive order, and for that reason, I want to spend a moment on it.

Mr. Speaker, why do we think we have leverage with the Chinese, and what is the situation with trade, United States-Chinese trade?

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for the American people, particularly American workers, to know that we are—the Chinese, as the expression goes, are eating our lunch on trade. They have preferential access to our market to the tune of—let me just read from the Washington Post—I do not even have to read it, because I know the fixtures. There is about 31 billion dollars' worth of trade. Of that, they buy about $8 billion from us, and we buy the $31 billion from them, giving them a $24 billion trade surplus. That means hard currency for the regime to stay in power.

What the American people and the American worker should know is that we have no reciprocal access to the Chinese markets. For the most part, most American products made in America are not—do not have market access into China. They want aerospace, electronics, wheat, some refrigeration. These are good, and those industries have been lobbying the Congress and the President for the renewal of MFN without any conditions, which is fine for them, but what about the rest of the work force in America? Why should our products not have access to the Chinese market?

Mr. Speaker, when we hear people talk about this great, growing market, for the most part it is about products made in China. An American business goes into China, accesses cheap labor, the minimum wage in most areas in China is $24 a month, a month; they access the cheap labor, and they want to have access to the Chinese market, or they sell those products back into the United States.

That is the marketplace, but it is not the marketplace if our products do not have the nontariff barriers, they do not have the access back into China for products made in America. So this whole thing about jobs is confined to a very narrow spectrum of jobs to the exclusion of a very broad spectrum of the American work force, so there is great concern in this body about the issue of trade, and that is just about market access.

In addition to that is the issue of transshipments in which the President, the Clinton administration, very forcefully issued, threatened to issue sanctions against China at the end of December, and guess what, China complied and reached an agreement on transshipments.

Transshipments means, as most of the Members know, that when a country's quota is exhausted—in other words, we allow x amount of Chinese sweaters into the United States. If they have exhausted their quota, they have filled their quota, they will simply sew in a label that says "made in wherever," some other place, probably a place that does not make sweaters because they would have already used up their quota into the United States, so they transship to another country, but they have gotten a little more arrogant and have just been sending them directly with the labels, but they are called transshipments for the reason I describe.

This is a billion-dollar business. The United States got the goods, literally, on China, and with the threat of sanctions at the end of this year, finally, the Chinese came to the table and agreed to negotiate, but it was a very tough negotiation, and I frankly think that absent this debate on MFN, the Chinese would not have been so willing, because they knew this was at risk and at stake.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing is prison labor for export. We will probably have a special thing just on prison labor. This is one of the vilest traditions because it is twofold. They round up people. They put them in reform through labor camps to reeducate them and change their thinking, and then they have them make these products and we say, "Those products should not come into the United States."

First of all, they are made by prison labor which is against our laws. We cannot have our workers competing with slave labor in China.

But in addition to that, the immorality of having this slave labor, of people who are now in the prison labor camps, and the slave labor camps, and the reform-through-labor camps, there are people who are there for offenses other than expressing their political and religious views. But there are those who are there for that reason. So the list goes on and on about how they violate our trade relationship.

The Chinese people's liberation army and its companies have thriving businesses in the United States. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MARKEY, talked about the AK-47s slightly changed just a little bit to get through Customs, through some letter that they got from the Treasury Department. And we are writing to Secretary Bentsen about that. And I think he seems willing to review that issue. But a million of those AK-47 rifles are sold on the streets of our country for $129. That is about one-tenth of the cost it would be for a similar weapon. It has become the weapon of choice for gangs, for drug dealers, for you name it.

We talked about weapons proliferation, and we were really talking about nonconventional, nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons. But in this case we are talking about arming to the teeth the teenagers of the country. It is cheaper to buy one of those than some of the high-falutin sneakers that teenagers like today.

So we have major problems with how they abuse our good nature that we have given them.

Why again do we have the leverage?

Back at the time of Tiananmen Square in 1989, they were making $6 billion off of our trade, almost $9 billion in 1990, $12 billion in 1991, $18 billion in 1992, $24 billion in 1993, and it will be into the $30 billions this year of profit they make off of our trade. They do not like capitalism. They abhor democracy. But they love money, and they need hard currency. It is up to nearly 40 percent of the Chinese exports which come to the United States. They need those exports to fuel their domestic economy growth.

We have been told by their trade people that they need to increase their exports in order to continue to fuel that growth. So they need access to our markets regardless of what their bullying tactics are and their brinksmanship has attempted to put forth. Why the fuss? Why have they hired many lawyers in Washington, DC? Almost every law firm has something going with China. Why have they hired so many public relations firms over and over?

When I was in China once, the Foreign Minister said to me, "We consider MFN your domestic issue. We're not involved in it." I said, "Well, that's interesting. Then why pay over $1 million to a public relations firm to lobby Congress to defeat the override of the President's veto if you consider it such a domestic issue?"

It is not a domestic issue for them. It is just not the United States, it is a domestic issue for them in their own country.

Sure, there are human rights violations all throughout the world. But when we have an opportunity to make a real difference in a country about how it treats its people, and how it allows freedom of speech and thought and religion, et cetera, and we do not use that leverage, then we lose the moral authority to go out and to say to people, "You should correct your human rights," because what we were saying if we walk away from the situation is we want to promote human rights, but we do not want to do it if there is any squawking from the business community.

And we do not want to do it if the other country objects. Well I mean, we are a very mature democracy.

We say that promoting human rights and democratic principles is part of our foreign policy, and indeed President Clinton, I am very proud to say, has reinforced that message. That is why I am so very, very proud of Secretary Christopher. He went there to deliver a message. He was strong enough to take what was inevitable from the Chinese, and anybody who has dealt with them a long time knows that this is act one, bully; act two, soften; act three, let us sit down and talk. He had enough self-confidence and the strength of his commitment to the promotion of human rights throughout the world that he was the person to do the job. And I am proud that he did it.

The third issue that I touched on, and it was the issue of proliferation and that the Clinton administration has issued sanctions against China for the sale of the missile technology to Pakistan, giving them the capacity to launch a nuclear weapon. It seems ironic that everybody says oh, we cannot lift MFN in China or even threaten to, because they will not cooperate with our policy as far as North Korea is concerned and their developing a weapon. Well China has no interest in a nuclear Korean Peninsula. They have every interest in it being non-nuclear, so South Korea decides now that it wants a weapon if North Korea does, and Japan says well, I have to have one if they have one. So it is in China's interest to cooperate on North Korea.

But at the same time people are saying we need their help there, they are forgetting conveniently that China is part of the problem by proliferating weapons to non-safeguarded countries, weapons that are very serious, and which our law requires sanctions, for which I am pleased that the Clinton administration did.

Of course, obviously I could talk all night. I have a lot to say about this, as do many of our other Members, and they will be in the nights ahead. But I through it was important, as our colleagues did, that we stand up and say thank you, Mr. Christopher, for having the courage of your convictions, for being willing to come back here and take the attacks of the new China lobby in Washington, DC, including, may I say, some former Secretaries of State who made their reputation and their name as a part of the public sector in this country, and who are now extensively involved in business deals in China. That is their right, and I respect their opinion that they hold that they disagree about China MFN. But for them to criticize the Secretary of State for standing up for American values, while making big money, and this China thing is very big money, now they are personally financially benefiting from it, I think it is appalling.

I think they owe the American people an apology, and I think also the press should really point out that while so and so is speaking as a former Secretary of State or a former National Security Adviser, he is also in theory doing business deals as we speak with China, and there is a direct conflict of interest. As I said, they have a right to do business, and they have a right to their opinion. The public has a right to know what their financial gain is when they speak as a Secretary of State and they are privately benefiting from the statements they are making.

I will end, Mr. Speaker, and then we will do this another night and in the morning as well. In addition to thanking Secretary Christopher, I want to quote from the New York Times editorial this week entitled "Standing up to China." It supported the conditioning of MFN to China, and it says, "To kowtow to Chinese bullying would be to repeat the mistakes of the Bush administration which squandered American influence by its consistent refusal to press human rights issues." The Clinton administration needs instead to be forthright about its continued determination to insist on human rights progress.

China, despite its cool indifference, desperately needs the over $20 billion hard currency surplus it earns from its trade with the United States to carry on with its ambitious economic development plans.

The Clinton administration has a clear right under international law and an obligation under United States law to link China's trade status to minimum human rights goals. The administration has demanded nothing unreasonable or demeaning, for the most part asking only compliance with international agreements to which China already subscribes.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

I want to thank the gentlewoman for her astute, thorough, eloquent analysis of the problems between our Nation and the People's Republic of China as we consider our trade relations with China.

I think that what we are saying tonight is not so much China-bashing, not so much as trying to prevent favorable trade relations with China, but to remind the Chinese people that we have important values that we live by in our Nation, important values that other nations have joined with us in the Declaration of Human Rights for prevention of this kind of tyranny and this kind of atrocities that are being waged in China today.

All we are saying to China by these conditions that we put in the prior Executive order that the President so clearly spelled out is abide by the international values that we all have for human rights, for religion, for equal trading rights, to prevent proliferation of arms, and we will be pleased to work with them as an equal trading partner. And I hope that those who may be listening tonight representing the People's Republic of China will take that as part of our important message to them. We want to trade with China. We want to be an equal trading partner with them. But, please, abide by these principles that we hold so dearly.

I thank the gentlewoman again for arranging this hour and for her eloquent address.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] for this and for your leadership as the ranking Republican on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. You bring great honor to this issue by your attention to it and the information that you have provided to our colleagues.

The respect with which you are held in this body is great, and it is because of your commitment to basic values and the hard work that you do in addition to the pronouncements which many people are willing to make, but you match it with hard work, and that is why I believe we have a chance to make a difference on this issue.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentlewoman for her kind words.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank your constituents for allowing you to do this.

In closing, I would just like to say the past 8 or 9 months, for the most part, those of us who have been advocating for this issue over the years have been fairly silent. We have not engaged in any China-bashing. We have held our fire, because we wanted to give the President's policy a chance to work, and I believe that the President has a good policy, and I give him high marks for his implementation of it including Secretary Christopher.

Make no mistake, I am blessed in my district with a 30-percent Asian-American community, many of whom are Chinese-Americans. We believe we will have a brilliant future with China, diplomatically, politically, economically, culturally. I know anybody our age, when we were little people, said if you dig a hole in the sand far enough you will reach China, and we all felt this mystique and connection about this special place.

We will have a very wonderful relationship with them. This is not about China-bashing. The conditions are in the executive order about renewal. They are not about revocation. And it is for that reason I believe the Chinese will meet the conditions, and I urge my colleagues to support Secretary Christopher, and thank them for all the support they have given to the President's policy.

We will be back another evening and perhaps on morning business as well.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

EXTRAORDINARY CONTRACTUAL ACTIONS TO FACILITATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE (Public Law 85–804) Calendar Year 1993

FOREWORD

On October 7, 1992, the Deputy Secretary of Defense (DEPSECDEF) determined that the national defense will be facilitated by the elimination of the requirement in existing Department of Defense (DoD) contracts for the reporting and recoupment of nonrecurring costs in connection with the sales of military equipment. In accordance with that decision and pursuant to the authority of Public Law 85-804, the DEPSECDEF directed that DoD contracts heretofore entered into be amended or modified to remove these requirements with respect to sales on or after October 7, 1992, except as expressly required by statute.

In accordance with the DEPSECDEF's decision, on October 9, 1992, the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition directed the Assistant Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and the Directors of the Defense Agencies, to modify or amend contracts that contain a clause that requires the reporting or recoupment of nonrecurring costs in connection with sales of defense articles or technology, through the addition of the following clause:

> The requirement of a clause in this contract for the contractor to report and to pay a nonrecurring cost recoupment charge in connection with a sale of defense articles or technology is deleted with respect to sales or binding agreements to sell that are executed on or after October 7, 1992, except for those sales for which an Act of Congress (see section 21(e) of the Arms Export Control Act) requires the recoupment of nonrecurring costs.

This report reflects no costs with respect to the reporting or recoupment of nonrecurring costs in connection with sales of defense articles or technology, as none have been identified for calendar year 1993.

SECTION B—DEPARTMENT SUMMARY

Contractor: Intes Construction Company.

Type of action: Amendment Without Consideration.

Actual or estimated potential cost: Supplemental Decision (Released amounts previously approved but withheld from contractor (under ACAB No. 1235, April 10, 1992) until contract was complete. Contract was completed in 1993. ($2,500,000 was reported last year and will not be reported again to avoid duplication).

Service and activity: United States (U.S.) Army Corps of Engineers.

Description of product or service: Construction of a composite medical facility at Incirlik, Turkey.

Background: In ACAB No. 1235, dated 10 April 1992, the Board granted relief to Intes Construction Company by extending the period of performance to December 31, 1992, and increasing the contract price by $2.5 million, payable only when the contract was satisfactorily completed. Intes requests that the Board modify its decision to permit early release of part of the $2.5 million. The Corps of Engineers recommends approval.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers reports that Intes was able to negotiate deferment of actions by its creditors based upon the expectation of receiving payment in December 1992. Subsequent to the Board's decision and Intes' arrangements with its creditors, the completion date was extended as a result of change orders issued by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. Performance was issued by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. Performance was further delayed by Intes due to its inability to obtain adequate financing. Currently Intes finds itself facing the same plight that brought it to the Board with its original request.

Justification: The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers recommends that the Board authorize immediate release of $1 million, an additional $100,000 for each additional one percent of progress, and the remainder upon completion. Although Intes requested that payments be made at the rate of $250,000 instead of $100,000, and linked to time as opposed to progress, it now agrees that the restructuring proposed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers will be sufficient to enable it to complete the project. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers maintains that these measures are adequate to address the concern expressed by the Board in the original decision. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers notes that the job is 92 percent complete, that less than $1.5 million worth of work remains, and that $700,000 retainage will provide ample incentive for Intes to finish the work.

Decision: The Board agrees with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and therefore, authorizes the immediate release of $1 million, additional payments of $100,000 for each additional one percent of completion, and payment of the remaining $700,000 upon completion of performance.

This action will facilitate the national defense.

Contractor: Thiokol Corporation.

Type of action: Amendment Without Consideration.

Actual or estimated potential cost: $833,860.75.

Service and activity: U.S. Army Armament, Munitions and Chemical Command (AMCCOM).

Description of product or service: Settling a suit filed by the family of a Thiokol employee who died several days after being seriously burned in a fire at the Longhorn Army Ammunition Plant.

Background: Thiokol Corporation submitted an application for relief under Public Law 85–804 through the U.S. Army Armament, Munitions and Chemical Command (AMCCOM), seeking an amendment without consideration to contract DAAA09–90–C–0990 in the amount of $833,860.75, plus interest. The request represents the cost of settling a suit filed by the family of a Thiokol employee who died several days after being seriously burned in a fire at the Longhorn Army Ammunition Plant. AMCCOM forwarded the request to the Board with a recommendation that relief be granted.

After consideration of Thiokol's written submissions, its testimony before the Board, and the recommendation of AMCCOM, the Board has determined that relief is not appropriate for the reasons set forth below.

Statement of facts: Thiokol has operated and managed the Longhorn Army Ammunition Plant for many years under a series of cost-reimbursable operating contracts. These contracts included indemnification provisions covering unusually hazardous risks such as detonation or combustion of explosives and incendiary materials. The contract under which Thiokol seeks relief, however, was a separately negotiated, firm-fixed-price contract for the production of flares. It did not include an indemnification provision. (Hereinafter, this contract is called the Flare Contract to distinguish it from the Operating Contract.)

The Flare Contract was negotiated during the Spring and Summer of 1990. On several occasions during the course of negotiations, Thiokol was advised of the separate nature of the contract. Insurance was an item of discussion four times. Specifically, the contract specialist advised Thiokol that the Flare Contract was not a "standard government owned, contractor operated (GOCO) contract," and that Thiokol would need to get its own insurance. Thiokol ultimately responded with a letter stating that its liability needs were met by Worker's Compensation Insurance. The contract was awarded on November 30, 1990, without an indemnification provision.

During the same time frame, the Army and the operators of 18 Army ammunition plants were engaged in the final stages of defining the risks to be indemnified under a consolidated indemnification authorization for operating contracts pursuant to the Secretary's authority under Public Law 85–804. The process concluded with a memorandum of decision, dated November 14, 1990, that authorized inclusion of indemnification provisions in the operating contracts for 18 specified ammunition plants. The new indemnification provision was added to Thiokol's Operating Contract on December 20, 1990.

The fire occurred on September 27, 1991, when excess hexane was dumped into a trough that flowed to a collection pan. After the fire, a grounding strap was found next to the collection pan. Apparently, it had not been connected while the hexane was being dumped. Thus, investigators determined the most probable cause of the fire to be an electrostatic discharge that ignited hexane vapors.

Two Thiokol employees were seriously burned and hospitalized. One of them died several days later as a result of a heart attack. The family of the decedent filed suit on January 24, 1992, under the following provision of the Texas Worker's Compensation Act:

> This section does not prohibit the recovery of exemplary damages by the surviving spouse of heirs of the body of a deceased employee whose death was caused by an intentional act or omission of the employer or by the employer's gross negligence . . . [Article 8308–4.01(b), Texas Revised Civil Statutes]

Shortly thereafter, Thiokol sent AMCCOM a letter requesting authority to retain outside counsel. The letter cited provisions of the Operating Contract. In conversations between AMCCOM counsel and Thiokol counsel, Thiokol was again advised that the indemnification provision of the Operating Contract did not extend to work under the Flare Contract, and that the Flare Contract did not include an indemnification provision. Thiokol then unilaterally stopped work and commenced negotiations to add an indemnification provision to the contract. In May 1992, the Secretary authorized prospective indemnification.

Justification: Thiokol states that it performed the Flare Contract under the assumption that it was covered by the indemnification provision in the Operating Contract. This assumption was based upon the historical indemnification of operating contracts and the Secretary's execution, at about the time of the Flare Contract award, of the consolidated authorization for Operating Contract indemnification. Thiokol cites FAR Section 50.302–2, Correcting Mistakes, as authority for relief.

It asserts that the mistake was, or should have been, apparent to the contracting officer based upon historical dealings with the company.

Decision: The Secretary's November 14, 1990, memorandum authorizes AMCCOM to include an indemnification provision in operating contracts. It further authorizes contracting officers to extend coverage to subcontracts under operating contracts and to third party contracts when the ultimate purchaser of the items is an agency of the United States.

The memorandum did not address indemnification under other contracts between Thiokol and AMCCOM (such as the flare contract). Thus, it did not provide authority to include an indemnification provision in the flare contract.

We find no reasonable basis for Thiokol to have been misled by the memorandum. It clearly did not establish umbrella coverage for all hazardous activities undertaken by the Longhorn Division. It merely authorizes the extension of indemnification under specified circumstances. While it is conceivable that Thiokol may have been confused about whether its contract was a third party contract, it is unmistakably clear that the memorandum does not provide for self-operating extensions of coverage. Some action is required by the parties to implement the authority. It was incumbent upon Thiokol to initiate that action.

We also find no reasonable basis for Thiokol's assumption that it was covered by the Operating Contract indemnification provision. To the contrary we find ample reason to believe that Thiokol knew or should have known, that it was not covered by the Operating Contract. AMCCOM specifically advised Thiokol that it would require insurance because the Government would not be responsible for any risk of injuries sustained in contract performance. Thiokol responded with an assertion that it was covered by the Operating Contract as was further advised that it interpretation was accurate for equipment but not with regard to accidents resulting in injuries to employees. Although AMCCOM did not explicitly discuss the absence of an indemnification provision in the Flare Contract, we believe its actions were more than sufficient to put Thiokol on notice that employee injuries were not covered by either the Flare Contract or the Operating Contract.

There may be circumstances under which the Board would grant relief for liabilities related to an unindemnified contract, however, they are not presented by this request. Notwithstanding the importance of indemnification in munitions production, the Board must insist that the parties bear some minimum responsibilities in an arm's length bargain. To do otherwise would encourage laxity in important matters such as this. It is the Board's view that Thiokol bears the responsibility for assessing the risks associated with a contract and for requesting indemnification, if appropriate. Given the discussions concerning insurance, the sophistication of the applicant, and the unambiguous terms of the indemnification authorization, it is the unanimous view of the Board that relief is neither justified nor appropriate.

Contractor: MELA Associates, Incorporated.

Service and activity: U.S. Army Information Systems Selection and Acquisition Agency (ISSAA).

Description of product or service: Proposal preparation and other work directed by ISSAA.

Background: MELA Associates, Incorporated submitted an application for relief under Public law 85-804 through the U.S. Army Information Systems Selection and Acquisition Agency (ISSAA) for costs incurred in proposal preparation and other work directed by ISSAA in anticipation of a contract award. For the reasons set forth below, it is the unanimous view of the Board that relief should be granted in the amount of $783,716.

Statement of facts: Section 8(a) of the Small Business Act established a program that authorizes the Small Business Administration (SBA) to enter into contracts with other agencies and to subcontract the work to eligible businesses. Under this program the SBA may request a specific requirement from an agency for subcontracting to a particular firm. In October 1991, the SBA requested the Installation Transition Processing (ITP) project for MELA (a small, disadvantaged, woman-owned business). ISSAA agreed and commenced negotiations with MELA in December 1991.

The ITP project was intended to provide computer hardware and software in support of Army installations throughout the United States to process five sustaining base automation systems including (1) Installation Support Modules, (2) Standard Army Retail Supply Support Installation, (3) Standard Army Maintenance System/Table of Distribution and Allowances, (4) Standard Installation/Division Personnel System-3, and (5) Army Food Management Information Systems.

Because the Army was under tight time constraints to begin fielding systems under the ITP project, ISSAA directed MELA to begin performing a substantial amount of work related to the requirement in addition to submitting a proposal. This work included analyzing the Army's requirements, evaluating and testing alternative system designs, and configuring components to satisfy compatibility requirements to meet the ITP specialized information processing needs. Although no written agreement was executed, ISSAA expected to compensate MELA for these pre-contract costs after the contract was awarded. ISSAA's confidence in this arrangement was based upon the virtual certainty of a contract award after acceptance of a project by the SBA.

As it happens sometimes with virtual certainties, this one did not mature. In response to protests, the details of which are not relevant to this decision, the SBA determined that MELA did not satisfy the "regular dealer" requirements of the Walsh-Healy Act. Since MELA was no longer eligible for the award, ISSAA withdrew the ITP project from the 8(a) program on May 28, 1992, leaving MELA with dashed expectations and a host of uncompensated costs relating to the project.

Justification: In ACAB decision Nos. 1236 and 1237, Public Law 85-804 Applications of LDH Instandsetzungswerke and REM Ryder System-EWK GmbH, dated January 17, 1991, the Board determined that its authority to grant relief does not turn on the existence of an express, written contract. In that decision the Board authorized amendment of the implied contract of "fair consideration" created when an offeror submits a proposal in response to a government solicitation. The instant application differs from the LDH decision in that the contract resulting from the ITP solicitation would have been with a party (the SBA) other than the applicant. We believe, however, that there is little question that the parties to the implied contract of "fair consideration" are MELA and ISSAA. ISSAA requested the proposal and MELA furnished it. Thus, there is at least one contract available for adjustment by the Board.

Beyond the implied contract of "fair consideration," it is also likely that an implied (if not express) contract was created when ISSAA directed MELA to begin performance of the requirement with the expectation that MELA would be compensated after contract award. The likelihood of the latter contract raises an issue concerning the availability of other adequate relief authority within the Army (FAR Section 50.102(a)). Arguably, ISSAA could reduce to writing the action it has already taken.

We find that such relief, even if available, would be inadequate. ISSAA has noted that the line between proposal costs and the work it directed is not clear. Significant delay would be entailed in differentiating these costs. Because MELA is a small, disadvantaged business that has already borne many of these costs for over a year, we believe that additional delay would be inappropriate.

Decision: The Board finds that granting relief would facilitate the national defense. With regard to the work directed by ISSAA, the Army's interest in fairness demands immediate compensation. We also find that granting proposals costs are appropriate considering the unique circumstances of this application, i.e., that segregation of these costs would result in unacceptable delay, that MELA bears no responsibility for the turn of events that resulted in the withdrawal of the requirement, and that MELA is a small, disadvantaged business. Therefore, subject to the availability of funds to be obtained by ISSAA, and to the release by MELA of all claims against the Army arising out of, or related to, the ITP project, ISSAA is authorized and directed to formalize the implied contracts in a consolidated document and make payment in accordance with this decision.

The Board finds that granting relief would facilitate the national defense.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY

Contractor: Trident Marine Corporation.

Type of action: Amendment Without Consideration.

Actual potential cost: $1,062,347.00.

Service and activity: The Department of the Navy.

Description of product or service: Cleaning, abrasive blasting, and corrosion control services on Navy ships.

Background: The original request was submitted on May 3, 1991. The Contracting Officer requested additional information from the contractor on June 21, 1991. In addition, the Contracting Officer requested a Defense Contract Audit Service (DCAA) audit on May 21, 1992. Following receipt of additional information from the contractor and from DCAA, the Contracting Officer has forwarded the claim with a recommendation for denial.

The contractor, Trident Marine Corporation (Trident), 2305 56th Street, Hampton, Virginia, 23661, submitted the subject claim for $1,062,347 under contract N00189-89-D-0175. This is a fixed price, requirements-type contract for cleaning, abrasive blasting, and corrosion control services on Navy ships. By awarding a requirements contract, the Navy agreed that all requirements for this type of services would be fulfilled through this contract with Trident. The original contract included a base year and two one-year options for a total estimated value of $4,549,420. The contract was awarded on February 7, 1989, and expired on February 7, 1991, after the Government chose not to exercise the second option. Trident states that the shortage of delivery orders under the contract has caused substantial losses and has threatened the firm's viability.

The information in paragraph one provides sufficient basis for a final decision. Trident provided a Certified Public Accountant's (CPA) report to substantiate its position. DCAA performed an independent audit and compared its findings with those of the CPA.

Contracting personnel at Naval Supply Center (NSC), Norfolk, Virginia, indicate that Trident is not essential to the Navy's operations. The services performed under this contract are not highly technical in nature and could be performed by a number of other contractors. NSC awarded this contract based on full and open competition.

Justification: Trident bases their claim on five major factors. First, Trident claims that the Government caused them to incur excess labor costs to support the contract. Second, they claim that the contract required them to incur costs for a larger facility. Third, they claim that in order to perform, they had to lease additional equipment which remained idle. Fourth, they claim that they are entitled to lost profits. Finally, they claim that the Government delayed and disrupted performance of the contract.

Trident is requesting money to compensate them for each of the costs detailed in the above paragraph. However, the DCAA audit shows that Trident has no basis for the amounts it is requesting. The analysis below shows that the Government did not cause a loss in any of the claimed five areas.

Trident's claim regarding labor costs is based on three components: certification time for flame spray operators, salaries for quality assurance and program management personnel, and wages for idle workers kept on hand to staff the contract. As shown below, the facts do not support any of these components.

a. Although Trident personnel indicate that they had to train and certify 14 flame spray operators, their original proposal indicated they would only be using three operators, and that they already employed two of the three. Moreover, Trident has no time sheets or other labor records to support the number of hours claimed. Trident management personnel indicated that they have never used time sheets. However, they did submit time sheets to support their claim of Government delay.

b. Trident requests reimbursement for the salaries of two individuals—a quality assurance manager and a program manager. Trident cannot identify the individuals whose salaries it is requesting, nor does Trident have payroll records for these individuals.

c. Trident claims they employed eight workers full time for the entire two-year tenure of the contract. They request that the Government reimburse them completely for the cost of these workers. However, Trident has no time sheets or other labor records to support the cost of the workers. The fact is, Trident did receive orders under this contract, hence the workers could not have been idle. In addition, it is possible that Trident used these workers for other contracts.

With labor records documenting that these individuals were actually employed or that they were idle, the claim is unsubstantiated.

Trident requests money to cover the expense they incurred to lease a larger facility. However, Trident indicated in its original proposal in response to the solicitation that the existing facility would be adequate for performance of the contract. There is no evidence that the Government required them to move to a larger facility.

Trident requests reimbursement for a flame spray system and blast room that it leased for performance of the contract. As a result of a preaward survey and a Certificate of Competency investigation, Trident had to guarantee that it would acquire the needed equipment. Trident had a duty to show that it was a responsible offeror. Without the extra equipment, they would not have been responsible (they could not have performed successfully). Whether or not they included the cost for the equipment in their proposal, they must bear the cost for the equipment.

Trident included in its request an amount equal to ten percent of the estimated contract value to account for lost profits. However, the contractor received orders under the contract, which included profit in each line item. Trident is really asking for the profits it thought it would receive. FAR Section 50.302-1(b) indicates that the Government is not to adjust the contract price to account for a decrease in anticipated profits. Also, the estimated contract price already includes profit, so Trident would be collecting double profit.

Trident indicates that the Government delayed and disrupted work on three occasions. However, when DCAA questioned the validity of the claim and time sheets used to support it, Trident withdrew the portion of its claim related to allegations of delay and disruption.

Decision: a. Essentiality. FAR Section 50.302-1(a) states that the contract may be amended when the contractor's "continued operation as a source of supply is found to be essential to the national defense." NSC Norfolk contracting personnel indicate that Trident is not an essential source of supply. On the contrary, there are a number of sources for these services. Consequently, it was found that Trident is not essential to the national defense.

b. Government action. FAR Section 50.302-1(b) states that "when a contractor suffers a loss (not merely a decrease in anticipated profits) under a defense contract because of Government action . . . fairness may make some adjustment appropriate." First, Trident cannot show that it suffered a loss, because it has inadequate financial records. Second the alleged losses are not Government-caused, since these were financial risks of which the contractor was or should have been aware. Third, Trident has withdrawn the only direct claim of Government delay and disruption. Finally, Trident is attempting to recover anticipated profits, which is unacceptable. There is no evidence that a loss took place, or that Government action caused such a loss. It was, therefore, determined that the contractor did not suffer a loss because of Government action.

c. Conclusion. Since the contractor is not essential to the national defense, and since the Government did not cause the contractor to suffer a loss, the contractor is not entitled to an amendment without consideration under FAR Section 50.302-1.

Contractor: RD&D Corporation.

Types of action: Amendment Without Consideration.

Actual or estimated potential cost: $3,000,000.00.

Service and Activity:

Naval Regional Contracting Center, Washington.

Description of product or services: To build four extra-heavy duty lathes.

Backgound: The subject action is a request for Amendment Without Consideration under FAR Section 50.302-1. The request was originally submitted to the Naval Regional Contracting Center, Washington, on December 23, 1991, with necessary additional information provided to the Contracting Officer throughout much of 1992. After thorough analysis of the complete request, the Contracting Officer forwarded it with a recommendation for denial.

The contractor, RD&D Corporation (RD&D), 4693 Iroquois Avenue, Erie, Pennsylvania, claims that its costs to build four extra-heavy duty lathes under contracts N00600-87-C-0894 and N00600-87-C-1078 exceeded the total prices of the two contracts by $4,949,381, with attendant interest expense of $1,195,164.60. The request for adjustment is for $3,000,000, which RD&D described as the amount "sufficient to insure [sic] the company's viability." This is consistent with the statutory requirement that a contract may be amended without consideration, but only to the extent necessary to avoid impairment to the contractor's productive ability.

Justification: The fact that losses were incurred in performing Government contracts is not basis alone for exercising the authority of Public Law 85-804. RD&D, however, has cited both of the examples presented in FAR Section 50.302-1 as applicable in this case. The contractor asserts that it expended additional costs to construct lathes which, by complying with contract specifications, exceeded the Navy's real requirements; the claim is that Government insistence on infeasible specifications caused unnecessary rework and redesign effort. RD&D also claims that its losses, no matter how caused, impair its productive ability as a source of supply which is essential to the national defense, thereby entitling the firm to contract adjustments which would ensure its continued operation.

Technical issues of timing regarding submission RD&D's request are directly related to the issue of the firm having exhausted its administrative remedies. Contract adjustment is only authorized if the contractor submits its request before all obligations under the contract have been discharged and if it has exhausted all remedies available to it under the contract within the agency.

The subject matter of RD&D's claims (defective specifications and/or impracticability of performance) are matters routinely addressed and resolved by The Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals (ASBCA) pursuant to the Contract Disputes Act. However, it may be that RD&D's financial situation, in itself and as the wholly-owned subsidiary of a holding company (Sudbury, Inc., of Cleveland, Ohio) recently discharged from Chapter 11 bankruptcy with the expressed intent of selling RD&D, could be considered to require relief more quickly than could be obtained through the ASBCA.

Final payment had already been made on contract N00600-87-C-0894 before RD&D submitted its application for relief. But final payment for contract N00600-87-C-1078 was not made until several months after submission of the request. Since, however, the requested contract adjustment of $3,000,000.00 is not related directly to losses under either contract, but rather is stated to be the amount needed to maintain the productive capacity of the firm, consideration of the request as being related exclusively to contract 1078 would make it timely under Public Law 85-804.

RD&D asserts that its costs of performance for both contracts increased because of actions on the part of the Government. This assertion is summarized as: the Government's initial insistence on and prolonged adherence to a Headstock Horsepower drive of 100 H.P. 3 R.P.M. As a result of the Government's action in this regard, RD&D expended additional costs on engineering, design, material and work to construct lathes that were far more massive robust [sic], and sophisticated than necessary to meet the Navy's real requirements.

RD&D claims that it had to proceed with design and construction of the lathes "without the benefit of knowing the practical application of the specified capability," and that the Navy eventually "agreed to the relaxation of the 100 horsepower, 3 R.P.M. test requirement."

None of the three elements of this claim rises to the level of Government action which would result in relief under Public Law 85-804:

a. The Navy awarded contracts which contained performance specifications and test requirements. The specifications were written to satisfy the 50-year life cycle of necessary equipment, based on shipyard experience with current equipment and anticipated usage for known and expected materials comprising ship propeller shafts. The performance specifications were clear, unambiguous and achievable.

b. RD&D has stated that its offered prices for the two contracts were generally based on design and cost of a previously manufactured lathe. However, after the contracts were awarded, RD&D discovered that "a far more massive, complex and sophisticated design would be required." Over a two year period, RD&D completed an "iterative series of preliminary and critical design reviews" in order to "improve the probability that the machine would meet the 'letter' of the detailed specifications." Any costs which RD&D incurred in excess of the offered prices appear to have resulted from the firm having undertaken its in-depth engineering analysis after award of the contracts.

c. The lathes which RD&D delivered were accepted by the Navy as meeting the performance specifications of the contracts. The original test requirements were relaxed, by contract modification, at the request of the contractor; however, the purpose of the tests—to demonstrate that the equipment could perform as required—never changed.

In the alternative to the assertion that its losses were incurred due to Government action, RD&D contends that its contracts may be amended without consideration because it suffered losses—however caused—which impair is productive ability as a source of supply essential to the national defense.

The Navy does not consider RD&D to be an essential supplier. The four lathes delivered by RD&D, which represent all known requirements for this type of equipment, have a 50-year useful life; no additional procurements are anticipated. While it may become necessary to relocate one or more of these lathes, RD&D's assistance would be useful but not necessary.

In accordance with FAR Section 50.305(d), all other Government agencies identified as having an interest in the issue of RD&D's essentiality to the national defense were requested to provide their advice. Their input was as follows:

a. The United States Department of Commerce, International Trade Administration, identified RD&D as "the only domestic supplier left" which manufactures a machine "that meets the requirement for shaft turning as solicited by the Navy." The Navy's needs, however, have already been met; other similar requirement, have already been met; other similar requirements, if there are any, can be met by several firms which the Department of Commerce concedes have "the capacity (facilities) to manufacture equipment comparable to the Navy's needs."

b. The Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense, Production and Logistics, provided information on prior contracts performed by RD&D, but did not conduct an independent assessment of RD&D's "essentiality to the national defense industrial base" since that effort would duplicate the Navy's direct requests for information to military and civilian agencies.

c. The Department of the Army, for which RD&D has provided a substantial amount of equipment to Watervliet Arsenal, considers the contractor to be "a valuable supplier within a dwindling domestic base for machine tools," but not an essential supplier.

d. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, George C. Marshall Space Flight Center, "cannot support a determination that RD&D Corporation is essential for the national defense." As a lower-tier subcontractor to both Martin Marietta Manned Space Systems and to Babcock & Wilcox, RD&D is a "cost and schedule advantageous source" for manufacture and rehabilitation of large machine tools. But alternate sources have been identified for all required work.

Decision: a. Government action. FAR Section 50.302–1(b) states that "when a contractor suffers a loss (not merely a decrease in anticipated profits) under a defense contract because of Government action . . . fairness may make some adjustment appropriate." In this case, award of a contract and insistence upon adherence to performance specifications do not represent actions which warrant that the contract price be adjusted in the interest of fairness.

Therefore, it is determined that the contractor did not suffer a loss because of Government action.

b. Essentiality. FAR Section 50.302–1(a) provides that a contract may be amended when a "loss under a defense contract, however caused, will impair the productive ability" of a contractor whose "continued operation as a source of supply is found to be essential to the national defense." RD&D, however, is not a unique supplier of items for which there is any known or anticipated requirement.

Therefore, it is determined that the contractor is not essential to the national defense.

c. Conclusion. Since the Government did not cause the contractor to suffer a loss under contracts N00600–87–C–0894 and N00600–87–C–1078, and since the contractor's continued operation is not essential to the national defense, the request of RD&D Corporation for amendment of these contracts without consideration is denied.

Contractor: Avondale Industries, Inc.

Type of action: Amendment Without Consideration.

Actual or estimated potential cost: $25,000,000.00.

Service and activity: The Department of the Navy.

Description of product or services: Detail design and construction of LSD (CV) 49–51 (N00024–88–C–2048).

Background: By letter of December 22, 1992, Avondale Industries, Inc. (Avondale), New Orleans, Louisiana, submitted a request under P.L. 85–804 seeking an Amendment Without Consideration of $25 million under its contract for detail design and construction of LSD (CV) 49–51 (N00024–88–C–2048). Avondale requests immediate relief to preclude an adverse opinion by its outside auditors, which would impair Avondale's current relationships with its creditors, and would, in all probability, force Avondale to seek protection of Federal bankruptcy laws. Avondale states that P.L. 85–804 relief is appropriate in that it has submitted requests for equitable adjustments under its contracts with the Navy for over $340 million, and these have not been resolved. The Naval Sea Systems Command (NAVSEA) forwarded this request by letter of March 1, 1993, to the Navy Contract Adjustment Board (NCAB) and recommended approval of the request.

Status of the Avondale Contracts: Avondale had a backlog of approximately $769 million in Navy contracts for ship construction and repair on September 30, 1992. The majority of this effort, associated with the T–AOs (N00024–88–C–2050) and the LSD (CV)s (N00024–88–2048) is expected to result in an overall loss, without consideration of the pending requests for equitable adjustment (REAs). Each of these contracts was awarded to Avondale after competitive bidding, with Avondale being the lowest responsive offeror.

Status of the REAs: In late 1991, Avondale informed NAVSEA that it was planning to submit a number of REAs in addition to those already submitted. These REAs amount to over $340 million, covering a number of NAVSEA contracts. NAVSEA promptly created an evaluation team consisting of appropriate technical, procurement and legal professionals. The last of these REAs was submitted in September 1992. The evaluation team is being assisted by the Defense Contract Audit Agency (DCAA) for audit support. Additional outside accounting and technical support is also being used to expedite the evaluation. Not including audit support some thirty Government personnel are dedicated to resolving these claims. Because of the number and the complexity of the claims, they cannot be immediately analyzed or resolved. Extensive technical analysis reports must be prepared and legal entitlement positions must be determined. This effort will require several months before NAVSEA will be in a position to make fair and reasonable proposals for resolving these REAs.

Current financial situation: Although Avondale is currently performing its contractual obligations, due to its outflow of cash to cover losses on Navy contracts and the time required to resolve the REAs, Avondale's cash flow position is such that if additional funds are not provided in 1993, it is forecasted that the Avondale cash position will be insufficient to meet operational requirements. NAVSEA has advised that Avondale is currently undergoing an annual financial audit by its independent auditors, which is required to be completed and submitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission by March 31, 1993. The auditors have indicated to Avondale and to NAVSEA that based on Avondale's projected financial condition, they will issue an opinion questioning Avondale's "going concern" status. Such a qualified opinion would breach certain of Avondale's credit agreements with its banks and would raise the realistic expectation that Avondale would seek protection under Federal bankruptcy laws. Avondale has also stated that such a qualified opinion would cause certain loans to be accelerated and become payable. In the event of bankruptcy, there is a real probability that Avondale will cease work on unprofitable contracts, and will seek to repudiate such contracts. Avondale has worked with its banks to restructure its debt. NAVSEA has assisted in this effort to restructure these arrangements. In addition, NAVSEA has already taken action to improve Avondale's cash flow by increasing progress payments to Avondale. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy (FM) approved unusual progress payments for Avondale on April 9, 1992. While current forecasts indicate that Avondale will have available cash until the June-November 1993 period, the auditors have indicated that they will be forced to issue a qualified opinion at the end of March 1993, unless additional sources of funding can be identified. NAVSEA has extensively reviewed these cash projections, and has presented them to the Navy Contract Adjustment Board. This situation compels the Navy to act at this point.

Consideration of alternatives: The following alternatives have been considered but are unsatisfactory for the reasons indicated. Take no action on the Avondale request and await the auditor's opinion. It's very probable that a qualified opinion will be issued, causing creditors to refuse further credit, consequently creating the potential that Avondale would seek the protection of Federal bankruptcy law. Actions after bankruptcy cannot be predicted. A contract can be assumed or rejected, and it's likely that Avondale would reject its larger loss contracts. The Navy would then have to take action to preserve the hull construction work, and find another contractor, or renegotiate with Avondale. These actions are both unsatisfactory from a planning standpoint and from a financial standpoint.

In the event of bankruptcy and rejection of certain contracts, the Navy would have to complete the work in another yard. Because of the large number of ships under repair or under construction, this is an impractical alternative. NAVSEA has performed an analysis of the cost to complete the ships under contract at other facilities and has estimated that it would cost approximately $532 million more than to have the ships completed by Avondale. In addition, based on recent experience in attempting to complete two other ships at another shipyard, this estimate is highly dependent on the ability of the new shipyard to schedule in such work, and the ability of the new shipyard to obtain necessary skilled labor and professional workforce. In addition to the cost of completion, significant delays can be expected. The Navy would have to select a completion contractor(s), arrange for transfer of the ships, materials and equipment, and provide for the transfer and review of necessary engineering products. Schedule slippages are therefore expected to be lengthy.

Await resolution of the REAs: The analysis of the REAs will not be completed in time to yield significant cash settlements and to avert a qualified opinion. Since such an opinion will begin a train of events that will make obtaining additional credit difficult if not impossible, REA resolution will be too late to address the problem. At this point, twenty REAs have been submitted, totaling about $343 million. These REAs must be reviewed from a technical standpoint, resulting in a Technical Analysis Report (TAR). After TAR completion, a legal analysis is performed to determine whether entitlement has been demonstrated, and to provide NAVSEA with legal advice and recommendation in resolving the claims. This process has, as described above, been expedited, but due to the complexity of the REAs, immediate resolution is not possible.

Determinations: The Navy Contract Adjustment Board determines that it is essential to the national defense to grant immediate aid under P.L. 85–804 to resolve the immediate Avondale short term cash flow problems for the following reasons:

1. The completion of the ships are essential to the national defense. The Vice Chief of Naval Operations has affirmed the requirement for a fourth LSD (CV) class ship by letter dated December 11, 1992. This assumes completion of the existing vessels. In addition, the T–AO class is part of a long term operational requirement. Continuation of these ships is therefore crucial.

2. Absent P.L. 85–804 relief, Avondale will receive an opinion by its auditors that will question its going concern status. Such a qualified opinion will impair Avondale's ability to obtain loans and additional work, and impair the continuation or completion of the ships under construction.

3. A consideration of the alternatives reveals no practical or feasible alternatives. Completing the ships at another shipyard would add significant cost and undue schedule delay.

4. Immediate P.L. 85–804 relief will accomplish the objective of allowing Avondale to continue working into 1994, and permitting the resolution of the REA's.

Conclusion: Applicable regulations provide that no contract, amendments, or modifications shall be entered into under the authority of P.L. 85–804 unless other legal authority in the Department is deemed lacking or inadequate. In the current case, the financial situation of Avondale is such that absent immediate action, Avondale's credit will be impaired and it may seek protection from its creditors under the bankruptcy laws. This will result in unacceptable uncertainty, delay and possible work stoppage on essential Navy ship construction. Further, because of the complexity of the pending requests for equitable adjustment and the period of time necessary for evaluation and resolution, the NCAB considers the normal contract disputes resolution process inadequate to resolve Avondale's financial situation.

FAR Section 50.302–1(a) provides: "When an actual or threatened loss under a defense contract, however caused, will impair the productive ability of a contractor whose continued performance on any defense contract . . . is found to be essential to the national defense, the contract may be amended without consideration, but only to extent necessary to avoid such impairment to the contractor's productive ability."

Decision: For the foregoing reasons, the NCAB has concluded that Avondale faces an actual or threatened loss which will impair its productive ability on contracts whose continued performance is essential to the national defense. The operating forces need the ships under construction. The relief of $25 million recommended by NAVSEA is considered adequate to supplement the ash flow position of Avondale to achieve the Navy's purpose of maintaining Avondale as a going concern until the analysis of the REAs is complete and an overall resolution of the REAs can be expected.

The Navy Contract Adjustment Board adopts the NAVSEA recommendations that this relief be conditioned as follows: the modification(s) preclude the use of any amounts in excess of $2 million provided pursuant to P.L. 85–804 for the payment of any principal on debt; funds are not authorized under P.L. 85–804 for payment to Avondale in the event Avondale's creditors attach any assets of Avondale, in the event any of Avondale's creditors initiate foreclosure proceedings on any secured debt, or in the event Avondale's creditors, or Avondale itself, files a petition for involuntary or voluntary bankruptcy; in the event that a settlement of the REAs is not achieved by mutual agreement, any amounts paid to Avondale pursuant to P.L. 85–804 shall offset any recovery ultimately obtained by Avondale through a court or board of contract appeals proceeding; and further provided that Avondale and its creditors ("the Bank Group") implement the "Key Terms and Conditions" in general accordance with the creditor's letter of February 5, 1993.

Accordingly, the Navy Contract Adjustment Board in the exercise of the authority delegated to it, grants an amendment without consideration under P.L. 85–804 in the amount of $25 million, and finds that this is essential to the national defense. The increase will be applied at the discretion of the contracting officer to avoid a negative cash flow. As requested by NAVSEA, the contracting officer is authorized to amend any or all of the current Navy contracts with Avondale, under which losses are occurring, as may be administratively convenient. The contracting officer shall provide for such internal controls and audits as are deemed necessary to validate appropriate use of this money.

Contingent liabilities

Provisions to indemnify contractors against liabilities because of claims for death, injury, or property damage arising from, nuclear radiation, use of high energy propellants, or other risks not covered by the Contractor's insurance program were included in these contracts; the potential cost of the liabilities cannot be estimated since the liability to the United States Government, if any, will depend upon the occurrence of an incident as described in the indemnification clause. Items procured are generally those associated with nuclear-powered vessels, nuclear armed missiles, experimental work with nuclear energy, handling of explosives, or performance in hazardous areas.

Contractor: Commercial Siding and Maintenance Company.

Type of action: Award New Contract.

Actual or estimated potential cost: $179,900.00.

Service and activity: Plattsburgh Air Force Base, New York.

Description of product or services: Replacement of Room on the F–111 Flight Simulator Building.

Background: Commercial Siding and Maintenance (CSM) was a subcontractor to L&H Development Corporation (L&H) under Contract No. F30636–87–C0742 to replace the roof on the F–111 Flight Simulator Building at Plattsburgh Air Force Base, New York. CSM claims it performed work under its contract with L&H, the prime contractor, but that L&H's owner disappeared and absconded with all the funds that L&H had received from the Air Force for work performed under the contract. CSM requests that the Air Force enter into a contract with it, reimbursing it for its out-of-pocket expenses of $179,900.00 that it claims it expended in performing its subcontract with L&H.

CSM failed to file suit under L&H's payment bond before the expiration of the statute of limitations under the Miller Act. In addition, CSM claims it did not bring suit directly against the prime contractor because it alleges that L&H had declared bankruptcy. (The Bankruptcy Notice submitted by CSM says that the name of the debtor is Donald L. Maracle, also known as an officer in L&H Development Corporation. While this notice does not show that L&H had declared bankruptcy, this fact is not relevant to the Board's decision.) Instead, CSM sought relief under P.L. 85–804 from the contracting officer. The contracting officer denied the request, concluding that the Air Force did not have privity of contract with CSM. CSM now seeks "to have a contract entered into between the U.S. Government and Commercial Siding as a subcontractor to provide payment for the outstanding balance due to Commercial Siding."

Justification: The Air Force, through its Air Force Contract Adjustment Board (Board), has decided to review the contracting officer's decision. Under the appropriate circumstances, and agency may grant relief to subcontractors. While such relief is normally granted by amendment to the prime contract, for the use and benefit of the subcontractor, relief, if warranted, may be granted directly to the subcontractor by directing the contracting officer to enter into a contract with the subcontractor for the purpose of effecting payment to the subcontractor.

CSM, as a subcontractor, seeks relief under the Board's authority to grant contract adjustments. Under Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) Section 50.302–1 (48 C.F.R. Section 50.302–1), which CSM quotes in its request, contract adjustments are authorized as follows:

When a contractor suffers a loss (not merely a decrease in anticipated profits) under a defense contract because of Government action, the character of the action will generally determine whether any adjustment in the contract will be made, and its extent. When the Government directs its action primarily at the contractor and acts in its capacity as the other contracting party, the contract may be adjusted in the interest of fairness. Thus, when Government action, while not creating any liability on the Government's part, increases performance cost and results in a loss to the contractor, fairness may make some adjustment appropriate.

CSM has not established that it is entitled to relief under FAR Section 50.302-1. It is essential, under FAR Section 50.302-1, that there be some Government action that causes harm to the contractor. No such action is present in the case of CSM. In the cases relied upon by CSM, contractors, including subcontractors, were provided relief because some type of Government conduct harmed the contractor.

In the present case, the Government did not engage in any action, or inaction, that harmed CSM. While CSM, in passing, alleges that "the government failed to ensure that the individual sureties possessed the requisite assets," this allegation is unproven and irrelevant.

In a supplement to its request, CSM alleges that "[p]art of the problem in the one (1) year [Miller Act statute of limitations] expiring was that the government was insisting on warranties which was part of the original contract. . . ." This allegation does not establish government action that has increased CSM's performance cost or that has resulted in a loss to CSM, as is required by FAR Section 50.302-1(b). Other than the accusation itself, CSM presents no evidence that the Government engaged in any action causing harm to CSM. Moreover, the allegation is irrelevant because CSM never sought relief from the surety.

CSM's inability to obtain payment is the result of its failure to file suit under the Miller Act, rather than any Government action. Although CSM argues that it is without any other legal remedy, CSM could have brought suit against L&H's surety. Congress enacted the Miller Act, 40 U.S.C.A Sections 270a-270d (West 1986), to protect subcontractors from prime contractors who do not pay for work performed on a government contract. Section 270a of the Miller Act provides that the prime contractor must post a payment bond to guarantee payment of the subcontractors. If the subcontractor is not paid, then it may sue on the bond in federal district court, but the suit must be commenced within one year after the day on which the last labor was performed or material supplied. 40 U.S.C.A Section 270b (West 1986).

Decision: The Board has granted the request for review, but denies relief. CSM has failed to establish that it is entitled to relief under P.L. 85-804. Any loss that CSM has suffered is due to the conduct of the prime contractor and its failure to seek relief under the Miller Act or against L&H. Because CSM has failed to show that Government action contributed to its loss, relief under P.L. 85-804 and FAR Section 50.312-1 is inappropriate. All members of the Board concur in this decision.

Contingent liabilities

Provisions to indemnify contractors against liabilities because of claims for death, injury, or property damage arising from nuclear radiation, use of high energy propellants, or other risks not covered by the contractor's insurance program were included in one contract; the potential cost of the liabilities cannot be estimated since the liability to the United States Government, if any, will depend upon the occurrence of an incident as described in the indemnification clause.

Contractor:	Number
McDonnell Douglas Space Systems Company (DELTA II Program)	1
Civil Reserve Air Fleet (Somalia)	1
Civil Reserve Air Fleet (Southwest Asia)	1

[1] Two additional indemnifications were approved; however, the Air Force has deemed them to be "classified," not subject to this report's purview.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

CHINA: THE EMERGING ECONOMIC COLOSSUS

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share with my colleagues a very thoughtful speech delivered by former Commerce Secretary and my Bristol, CT, constituent, Barbara Hackman Franklin. In her remarks, Ms. Franklin gives us considerable material to ponder as we examine the importance of international trade in general and with China in particular.

CHINA: THE EMERGING ECONOMIC COLOSSUS

(By Hon. Barbara Hackman Franklin, Former U.S. Secretary of Commerce)

CHINA

China has always held a special intrigue for westerners. I am no exception. This vast populous country is thought by many to have the oldest culture on Earth. Certainly it was the center of Eastern civilization. Many Asian neighbors drew upon China as the source of their written language, religion, philosophy and style of living. It was already a sophisticated society when Marco Polo traveled there in the fourteenth century, bringing back such treasures as silk, tea, spices, noodles, fireworks, exquisite porcelain, and wood block printing.

But this special fascination has not translated into a smooth and predictable relationship over the past few centuries. To us, China has been alternately open, then closed, and then reopened again. The result is that we do not understand China very well—its ancient culture, its history, its people, way of life, political structure or place in today's world. But, our fascination persists, perhaps because we have a sixth sense about—and emotional reaction to—the huge sleeping giant on the other side of the world.

Now the sleeping giant has awakened. It is increasingly important—even urgent—that we understand this unusual country, which could eclipse the United States in the size of its economy in the early part of the next century. I believe we have reached a defining moment in our relationship with China.

THE HISTORY OF THE U.S.-CHINA RELATIONSHIP

Ever since Hong Kong was established—back in the days of clipper ships when trade with China flourished—the United States was engaged, along with Europe, in China. But having existed as a self-contained society for many centuries, China did not move easily into a cooperative relationship with the nations of the West.

Restriction of trade to specific ports in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, the Boxer Rebellion, the limit on trade by the mandarins in the early 20th century, the Japanese occupation before and during World War II, the brief reopening under Chiang Kai-shek, and the quick retreat behind the walls of communism in 1949—these are some of the more notable instances of the on-again, off-again flirtation China has had with the West.

It has only been since Richard Nixon's trip in 1972 that China has again been reopened to the U.S. And even though George Bush was sent to establish a liaison office after the Nixon visit, it was not until 1979, in Jimmy Carter's Presidency, that the U.S. officially recognized China.

U.S.-China trade resumed in 1972, but remained minimal until 1979 when China's "open door" policy began. China launched its economic reforms, made efforts to attract foreign investment, and created Special Economic Zones. In 1980, the U.S. accorded China Most Favored Nation trading status. Under our laws, this status must be renewed annually. It has become harder to do this every year because of the growing pressure to link MFN for China with progress in human rights.

In 1983, in the Reagan years, we took our commercial relationship one step further. The Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade was begun—Malcolm Baldrige was Secretary of Commerce—to provide a government-to-government channel to increase business activity and handle problems.

As freer markets and economic growth progressed, so too did the move toward more political freedom. A high water mark was reached when the democracy movement was put down forcefully at Tienanmen Square in 1989. As a result, the U.S. and a number of other countries imposed sanctions. The U.S. imposed six—prohibiting military contacts and sales, high level government contacts and government backed financial support for trade and investment, among other things. Once again, China openness took a backward step.

Moves to normalize relations inched forward in 1992. Three new market opening agreements were signed and were the first step toward "reopening" China for commercial activity. A trip I made last December, at the request of President Bush, was another "reopening" step. It also removed one of the sanctions—the one prohibiting high-level government contacts between China and the United States. Others remained, and today the U.S. is the only country still maintaining sanctions against China that are linked to the Tienanmen Square tragedy.

CHINA'S PLACE IN THE WORLD TODAY

Today, China is a country in transition. Much change is occurring—economically, politically and socially. And the course of the change is not always smooth or even; semi-controlled chaos might be one way to describe it. But the outcome has tremendous significance for us in the United States as well as for all the rest of the world.

China is the world's most populous country—1.2 billion people. This statistic alone gives China great weight in the community of nations, but there are other reasons that it has tremendous strategic importance.

Its geography is one. China is the geographic center of Asia. It shares a border with 14 different countries—Russia, India, Pakistan, North Korea, Vietnam, Laos, Burma (now Myanmar), Mongolia and Nepal, to name a few. China has more common borders than any other country in the world.

China also has a significant role in political and security terms. It has one of the seven permanent seats on the United Nations Security Council. This means China has a voice—and a veto—over the decisions made by this organization, mainly involving peace-keeping missions the nations of the world should undertake and how to conduct them.

Finally, and most importantly, we now have China's escalating economic clout. China's economy is the fastest growing large economy in the world. The International Monetary Fund already ranks China as the third largest economy in the world, behind the U.S. and Japan. Predictions are that the Chinese economy will grow between 13 and 14 percent this year despite stringent efforts to rein it in and cool it down. This is after a 12 percent growth rate last year.

No end is in sight. Economists around the world expect China's economy to continue growing at least 6 to 8 percent annually for the next 10 years. In contrast, growth rates for industrialized countries, including the United States, are predicted to remain at only 2 to 3 percent for at least the next five years. This means that China could overtake the U.S. as the world's largest economy within the next decade.

Right now, China is the largest market in the world—for aircraft, for telephones, for construction equipment and, increasingly, for consumer goods. The country needs virtually everything we produce and sell. And demand is growing rapidly. In cities like Shenzhen, one of the first special economic zones located in the south of China just across the border from Hong Kong, one can stand on the street corner and feel the dynamism and the energy as the Chinese people build another Hong Kong. I have never before seen and felt that kind of dynamic growth in any other place.

However, there are still contradictions. Some parts of China, especially in the north and west, have not yet been touched by the freedom of the special economic zones. They are not as advanced nor prosperous. But, one thing is clear—the Chinese want to advance, to prosper, to accumulate wealth.

The economic promise of China is heightened by Hong Kong and Taiwan.

Hong Kong will revert to China from Britain in 1997. Though there are ongoing controversies between China and Britain about how much democracy there should be in Hong Kong's governance, I believe, that in the end, the reversion will take place without incident. Hong Kong is by far the largest investor in China, and the economies of the two are unmistakably intertwined.

Taiwan is the second largest investor in China today. The people of Taiwan have done well economically since the Nationalist Chinese retreated there after the Communists assumed control of mainland China in 1949. And while tensions and political differences still exist between China and Taiwan, economic ties are flourishing. If one day in the next century Taiwan and China should decide to join together again, that would further accelerate the dynamism and size of the Chinese economy.

So, for all these reasons—population, geography, politics, and especially, economic potential—China must be reckoned with and understood.

I came away from my trip there last year more convinced than ever that we must remain engaged in China. This is the only way the United States can hope to influence the direction of change and help ensure a positive outcome—a market-oriented economy paired with a more open and free society.

However, there are others who think differently. There are a number of people, historically and now, who think the U.S. should not have contact or do business with China. There are those who are concerned about China's human rights record, such things as imprisonment of dissidents, use of prison labor to produce products for export, and coercive birth control measures. There are others who think we should not deal with any regime that is Communist, and therefore, an enemy. And, there are still others in our intelligence and defense establishments, who see a threat in China's military modernization and arms sales to other nations.

This jumble of attitudes and opinions about China and what the U.S.-China relationship should be made for a complex situation here at home.

MY MISSION TO CHINA, DECEMBER, 1992

Let me talk for a moment about my trip to China, where it fits into this mosaic, and what it accomplished.

Just after the 1992 election, President Bush asked me to go to China to reconvene the Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade with my counterpart Li Lanqing, then head of the Ministry of Foreign Economics and Trade. (He has since been elevated to Vice Premier and the Ministry has been renamed the Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Relations.) The Commission had been moribund since 1989 because of the sanction barring ministerial contact with China. As I said before, my trip lifted that sanction. It was the first Cabinet-level contact since Tienanmen Square.

As I also mentioned before, the trip was the next logical step in normalizing the U.S.-China commercial relationship, following the signing of three new market-opening agreements. These agreements dealt with market access, protection of intellectual property and a prohibition against using prison labor to make products for export to the U.S. The trip's objective was the advancement of U.S. commercial interests and the continued encouragement of economic reform and political freedom in China. To underscore the commercial aspects, I took six U.S. business people with me.

Before going, I met here with the Chinese Ministers of Aerospace and Telecommunications. I strongly indicated to both that our growing trade deficit with China was becoming an increasing problem and that the only way to address it was for China to buy more U.S. products. I had a list of pending U.S. sales—at the top was Boeing aircraft purchase. When I arrived in China, ten days later, and had my first bilateral meeting with Minister Li, he was quick to inform me that we would get our Boeing contract and that, to underscore Chinese good faith, it would be signed while I was in China. It was, as were other contracts between Chinese companies and AT&T and Northern Telecom. All told, we brought back more than $1 billion in new contracts for American companies. Let us remind ourselves that every billion dollars in export creates or supports more than 19,000 jobs in the U.S.

And, the discussions had with various other government and business officials were the stimulus for more U.S. business, signed later—including an order for GE engines, for more Boeing aircraft, a major AT&T joint venture, plus other sales of automobiles, satellites, and power generation equipment.

Other things accomplished on the trip—the whole of which netted more than either President Bush or I had expected—were these:

We moved forward on implementing the trade agreements, agreeing to specific deadlines, targets, and vehicles to accomplish specific objectives.

We agreed to negotiate a Memorandum of Understanding on end-user checks on "dual-use" technology products, such as computers, which could have both civilian and military uses. We indicated that if China agreed to allow checks of the end use of these products, it would be easier to convince our intelligence and military establishments that the Chinese were using them for peaceful purposes. That would provide leverage for the loosening of controls over the export of such products.

We agreed to resume negotiations on a bilateral investment treaty, to facilitate investment between our two countries.

During my talks with Primer Li Peng and other Chinese leaders, I made very clear that the U.S. also wanted to see substantial progress in a number of areas. I stressed that reducing the trade deficit, achieving full implementation of trade agreements, and addressing U.S. concerns in the areas of human rights and arms proliferation were the best ways to ensure a good working relationship between the U.S. and China.

I am proud of what we did to reopen commercial relationships with China more fully, to place the full weight of our government behind our business people, and to mend the U.S.-China relationship.

THE STATUS TODAY

The question now is: where is our relationship with China today, and where do we want it to go?

On balance, right now, in November of 1993, I think our relationship with China is one of mixed signals and escalating tensions, which holds the possibility of undoing much of our recent progress.

The Clinton Administration seems conflicted in its attitude toward China. Administration officials appear to be working at cross purposes. Strong objections to some of China's policies and actions are uttered at the same time a stream of high level visitors is traveling to China to extend olive branches. A meeting between President Clinton and China's President Jiang Zemin has been scheduled to be held during the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) conference in Seattle on November 18 and 19 as part of this campaign to soothe the troubled waters of the U.S.-China relationship.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS

There is some good news. The efforts we began last year seem to be moving forward.

On the business front, U.S. companies continue to rush to explore business opportunities, send more exports, and sign more contracts in China. About 2,000 U.S. companies have about $6 billion invested there now, making the U.S. the third largest investor in China. U.S. exports are growing substantially.

We continue to move forward on implementation of the market access agreement. The Clinton Administration is considering a bigger push on services; however, progress is slower than we would like. More programs has been made on implementation of the intellectual property rights agreement. The Chinese have taken significant steps by changing laws and setting up courts. The issue now is enforcement. Our government intends to pursue this concern.

Unfortunately, the progress in these areas has not done much yet to reduce our trade deficit with China. Estimates are that the deficit will climb to $23 billion this year, a significant jump from the almost $19 billion deficit recorded in 1992.

One thing that could be done to shave almost $2 billion off that deficit quickly would be for China to get serious about stopping illegal transshipments of textiles to the U.S. This is a continuing—and growing—problem. Textile products are shipped through Hong Kong, Taiwan and other Asian ports to obscure the country of origin and thereby avoid import quotas set by a textile agreement between the U.S. and China.

The current agreement is due to expire at the end of this year. The Chinese are dragging their feet on concluding a new one. Resolving this issue would help reduce the trade deficit and remove one point of tension in the U.S.-China relationship.

ESCALATING TENSIONS

The rest of the news about our relationship with China is not so good. A number of other incidents are causing tensions to escalate.

First, came the debate about whether Most Favored Nation status should be renewed for another year. President Clinton did the right thing—renewed it—but indicated there would be human rights conditions the Chinese would be expected to meet if MFN is to be renewed again next year. Even though the conditions irritated the Chinese, there was a sign of relief on both sides of the Pacific.

From here, things have deteriorated fast.

Perhaps the most significant event—the one that angered the Chinese the most—was the vocal opposition in the U.S. to China's bid for the Olympics. China desperately wanted to host the 2000 Olympics, viewed it as a right of passage that would enable the country to demonstrate that, economically at least, it had arrived as a player in the modern world.

However, some here in the United States launched a campaign, saying China did not deserve to host the Olympics because of its human right record. Human rights groups, some in the media and some members of Congress loudly and emphatically expressed their opposition to China being awarded the honor of hosting the games. The Chinese vigorously protested this injection of politics into the Olympic games site selection process and no one will ever know whether it played any role in the Committee's decision to award the games to Sydney, Australia. The Chinese think it did.

Another incident contributing to rising tensions was the August finding by the State Department that China had delivered missile parts and technology to Pakistan. If the technology was sold to Pakistan, the action would be a violation of the Missile Technology Control Regime guidelines to which China has promised adherence. The evidence may not be conclusive, and China has denied violating the treaty. But nonetheless, the finding automatically triggered sanctions against the sale of certain high technology equipment to China.

Sanctions can cost U.S. businesses billions of dollars and throw thousands of Americans out of work. To complicate matters, the U.S. action was unilateral. No other country which is part of the regime has joined us. Thus, our competitors are moving quickly to capture the business that U.S. companies are losing.

The U.S. business community has protested and President Clinton has agreed to review this decision. Hughes Aircraft Company and Martin Marietta Corporation, two companies that are being hurt most, are leading the charge. Hughes could lose contracts to sell 10 satellites to China, sales worth $250 million, jeopardizing 3,000 jobs, according to the Washington Post.

On the heels of the sanction decision was the confrontation in August and September over U.S. suspicions that a Chinese freighter bound for Iran was transporting chemical weapons. U.S. naval vessels prevented the ship from docking, and after weeks of intense negotiations, the Chinese agreed to let the ship put in at a Saudi port and be inspected by officials of all three countries. No weapons were found, and the Chinese have demanded an official apology.

And then came the Chinese underground nuclear test just weeks ago, performed over our objections. One wonders if the Chinese weren't just showing the U.S. that they would not tolerate interference in their affairs.

Now we are threatening more sanctions because of alleged violations of treaties protecting endangered species. China and Taiwan are accused of trading in rhinoceros and tiger parts, ingredients of traditional Chinese medicines. Both animals are on endangered species lists. If sanctions are imposed, millions of dollars of trade in flowers, timber and other plant and animal products would be affected.

We are also fast approaching the deadline for a six-month report due from the State Department to Congress on China's progress in resolving human rights issues. It is bound to be a focal point for reviving debate about China's human rights stance and the appropriate U.S. response. And whatever happens will be a major factor in 1994's annual debate about MFN renewal.

THE FUTURE

It is time we focused on our long-term relationship. We need to adopt a consistent, stable policy toward China. We need to develop a long-term vision of what our relationship should be. We must stop reacting to individual incidents and respond only in the context of this long-term vision.

And what should that vision be? I think it has to be rooted in a goal of being a friend, of helping China transform itself into a full-fledged modern, free market economy. This is the key to attaining a more free and open society in the most populous country in the world.

This means the U.S. has to stay engaged in China. We achieve nothing from withdrawal except a loss of influence. As an old China hand I know said, "we might go away in Asia, but China never will." Only by increasing the ties that bind us can we affect change.

We should have an expanding commercial relationship. We should pursue our agenda—pushing for full implementation of the market-opening agreements we have, reducing our trade deficit and supporting China's quest for membership in the GATT. We should intelligently balance all our interests in China—the commercial as well as our human rights and arms proliferation concerns.

To do this, we need to exercise the best of diplomatic judgement and skills, to disagree with the Chinese when we must, be tough-minded when necessary, but do so in the context of fostering an important friendship. We need to encourage, cajole and coax the Chinese forward, instead of blustering, threatening and shouting at them in public. Above all, we need to treat our Chinese friends—as we would any friends—with dignity and fairness.

I'm told by some close observers that the Chinese leadership is very upset about the deteriorating relationship with the U.S. They are rethinking whether they want a long-term partnership with our government. They fear the U.S. will not be a constant and consistent partner and will not treat them with the dignity and fairness they feel they deserve.

We in the U.S. must remember that China has other options. Japan and Europe are waiting in the wings, eager to forge stronger ties with the world's fastest growing large market.

Much remains to be done in China to fully resolve our concerns about human rights and arms proliferation. But the best way to promote progress is to stay engaged, to encourage China's economic reform and integration into the world economy. History has shown that economic freedom inevitably leads to personal freedom.

Let's not turn our back on the possibility of helping free markets and democracy along in China. If we are short-sighted and fail to adopt a long-term vision about our relationship, if we continue our current schizophrenic approach to a China policy, who knows what direction change could take. The U.S.—and the world—cannot afford to take this risk.

TRIBUTE TO LARRY KLEIN

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Larry Klein on the occasion of his being presented with the 1994 Tall Tree Outstanding Citizen Award by the Palo Alto Chamber of Commerce.

Larry Klein currently serves as chair of the Palo Alto Centennial celebrations, an enormous and exciting undertaking. His contributions to the Palo Alto community are well known and highly regarded. He served on the Palo Alto City Council for 9 years, serving as mayor in 1989, a job he performed with distinction and integrity. Larry Klein has been a leader in long-range planning, regional cooperation, and environmental protection. He has been tireless in his efforts to promote cooperation between the city and the Palo Alto Unified School District.

Mr. Speaker, Larry Klein is an outstanding citizen with an unswerving commitment to his community and public service. His work on behalf of the city of Palo Alto is exemplary and he is indeed a model for others to emulate. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting him on this auspicious occasion of receiving the coveted 1994 Tall Tree Outstanding Citizen Award.

TRIBUTE TO JONATHAN JOUBERT

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a distinguished young man from Rhode Island who has attained the rank of Eagle Scout in the Boy Scouts of America. He is Jonathan Joubert of Troop 13 in West Warwick, RI and he is honored this week for his noteworthy achievement.

Not every young American who joins the Boy Scouts earns the prestigious Eagle Scout Award. In fact, only 2.5 percent of all Boy Scouts do. To earn the award, a Boy Scout must fulfill requirements in the areas of leadership, service, and outdoor skills. He must earn 21 merit badges, 11 of which are required from areas such as citizenship in the community, citizenship in the nation, citizenship in the world, safety, environmental science, and first aid.

As he progresses through the Boy Scout ranks, a Scout must demonstrate participation in increasingly more responsible service projects. He must also demonstrate leadership skills by holding one or more specific youth leadership positions in his patrol and/or troop. This young man has distinguished himself in accordance with these criteria.

For his Eagle Scout project, Jonathan stripped, resealed, and waxed the floors at St. James Church in West Warwick.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in saluting Eagle Scout Jonathan Joubert. In turn, we must duly recognize the Boy Scouts of America for establishing the Eagle Scout Award and the strenuous criteria its aspirants must meet. This program has through its 80 years honed and enhanced the leadership skills and commitment to public service of many outstanding Americans, two dozen of whom now serve in the House.

It is my sincere belief that Jonathan Joubert will continue his public service and in so doing will further distinguish himself and consequently better his community. I join friends, colleagues, and family who this week salute him.

TRIBUTE TO CAROL KOUSNETZ STERKIN (1923–93)

HON. LESLIE L. BYRNE

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mrs. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a remarkable scientist, wife, and mother whose unique contributions to the American scientific community deserve our highest accolades and profound admiration. Although an accomplished scientist in her own right, Carol Kousnetz Sterkin will be most remembered as the legendary head of the Literature Search Function at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory [JPL] in Pasadena, CA, a position which she held with distinction for the past 30 years.

Carol Kousnetz Sterkin was born in Chicago, IL, in 1923 and spent her childhood under the shadow of the Great Depression. Taking advantage of a remarkably early ability to read, she finished every book in her father's extensive library by the age of 6. Since many of his books were technical in nature, the seeds of a life-long dedication to science were planted at an early age. As a young teenager bedridden by a severe accident, she continued her pattern of voracious reading which helped prepare her for admission to college in 1940.

She received her B.S. in physics from the University of Chicago in 1944 and, after working for 2 years as an engineer for General Electric on low pressure, plasma discharge research and igniter point development related to mercury pool tubes—thyratrons and ignitrons—she taught math and physics and completed her M.S. in nuclear physics at the University of Illinois in 1947. During these years she studied under several famous scientists, including Enrico Fermi, who were working on the Manhattan project at the time. While she was not involved with the initial development of the atomic bomb, she did participate in subsequent research and development for both the destructive and peaceful uses of the atom.

Long before the advent of modern feminism, Carol Sterkin deplored the sex discrimination suffered by professional women in science. She noted that often men with half her education were receiving twice her salary and 10 times the recognition for far less impressive work. This was especially true in the 1940's, when it was unusual for a woman to even study the sciences, not to mention actually teaching in that field.

In the following years, Ms. Sterkin developed severe moral reservations about the destructive uses of the atom. She was also ahead of her time in realizing the hazards of radioactive materials and decided that she did not want a career working with such substances. She is quoted as saying:

> At the time, the only work being done in physics was in the field of nuclear physics. I found myself surrounded by a group of men who had helped develop the A(tomic)-bomb at Los Alamos. Most of the graduate students in my nuclear physics courses could have written the (text) book! * * *. When I left I was faced with the dilemma of not really wanting to work with radio-active materials, and disapproving morally of the atomic bomb.

With these factors in mind, Carol turned more and more to the fields of research and technical writing. For the last 30 years of her life she served as the head of the Literature Search Function at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory Library. In this capacity she was so valuable because she combined the research skills of a librarian with the knowledge of a scientist, and became truly indispensable to the scientific community which she served.

She was a pioneer in the development of global access to online scientific and technical data bases. In the late 1960's and 1970's, she was one of the original developers (from the NASA side), along with experts from other government agencies and universities all over the world, of the online information systems that provide scientists worldwide with the capability of sharing and pooling knowledge. Until the time of her death, she remained one of the world's ranking experts in this field.

Again and again, she postponed her retirement because there was no one else at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory who could continue her work. Her extensive technical knowledge and acquaintance within the worldwide scientific community enabled her, not only to support the appropriate literature to a scientist, but also to put him/her in touch with the latest published work being done in the field.

Scientists all over the world knew her and valued her concept of unrecorded knowledge and information (as opposed to the common notion recorded information). This is the ongoing information as it is discovered and developed. It includes the personal knowledge a scientist has yet to document, unpublished documents and papers, current test and research results, personal scientific diaries, and so forth. For obvious reasons, in a rapidly changing technological world, this information is the most valuable to a scientist.

The high quality of her work is attested to by the fact that she did extensive work on extreme vacuums and atomic theory for Nobel laureate, Richard Feynman, the late American physicist of international fame. One of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory's principal scientists, Dr. James Stephens, has said that "she knew so much, it will be absolutely impossible to replace her." The truth of this statement is borne out by the fact that her position—which the JPL scientists are desperate to fill—remains vacant and they have yet to find anyone they feel even has the potential to grow into her capability.

Carol Sterkin was married at one time to Samuel Sterkin and was the mother of three sons, Bruce, Joel, and Lawrence. Although she worked in an era in which women often received little recognition for their accomplishments, she leaves a legacy of achievement, dedication, and expertise which has paved the way for greater recognition of other women of outstanding ability in the latter part of the 20th century. Her loss will be felt, not only by her family and local community, but throughout the scientific world for a long time. I ask my colleagues to join me on the floor of the House of Representatives to honor a truly great American, Carol Kousnetz Sterkin.

THE SERVICE EDUCATION REDEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to share with my colleagues a success story about cooperation between a community nonprofit organization, private corporations and a Federal grant program that has made a difference in the life of a young woman in Santa Fe, NM.

Brenda Ortega could have easily been another teenage statistic. Brenda was pregnant by the time she was a ninth grader and a high school dropout by 16. Today at age 18, Brenda has earned a GED, has a job with the New Mexico Economic Development Department and is a student at Santa Fe Community College. The link between Brenda's situation and success was the Service Education Redevelopment [SER] Program.

The Service Education Redevelopment Program is provided by a nonprofit organization which helps students obtain a high school equivalency degree and find employment. Funded by JPTA grants, State matching education funds, and contributions from private businesses and foundations, the Service Education Redevelopment Program finds students' jobs and pays their wages while they study to obtain a GED. While preparing students for the GED test, the SER program also coaches students in how to fill out a job application, how to dress appropriately, the importance of being on time and communicating with an employer.

I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing what is possible when we have cooperation between community, State, and Federal sources and the difference we can make in the lives of young people like Brenda Ortega.

GOVERNOR'S AWARD FOR DRUG AWARENESS WON BY HENRY COUNTY SCHOOL SYSTEM

HON. MICHAEL A. "MAC" COLLINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I announce that the Henry County School System, Henry County, GA, has won the prestigious Governor's Award for Drug Awareness for the fourth consecutive year. In a joint effort, all 15 schools throughout the county submitted a single application to the Governor's office and were then chosen for their dedication to such antidrug programs as Red Ribbon Week. With the help of PALS [Parents and Leaders in Schools], an organization made up of all the PTO's, PTA's, and advisory groups from each school, the students were able to achieve success in the battle against drugs.

This award demonstrates that children in today's society are willing to stand up to their peers and say "no" to drugs. We must all applaud this courage and commend them for their high moral values. However, we cannot forget the hard work done by the parents, teachers, schools, and local community in this equation. Without loving guidance or constant encouragement, this drug-free way of life that the students have chosen may not have been a reality.

This award says a lot about what works in our government. I am a firm believer that schools, as well as communities, thrive when problems are addressed on the local level, rather than by the Federal Government in Washington, DC. Parents and teachers know how to best educate children on the dangers of drugs. This recognition of the Henry County School System only proves my point.

Again, let me say, for the record, that I commend the Henry County School System and its students and teachers for their continued dedication to the war on drugs.

TRIBUTE TO BOB THOMPSON

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, this week is an important milestone for Robert J. Thompson, a distinguished gentleman from Chester County, PA. His friends and colleagues will come together to wish him well as he enters semiretirement. Bob Thompson is an individual who has had an extraordinarily successful career in both business and public service.

Most recently, Bob was president of the Chester County Chamber of Business and Industry, where he was a forceful advocate for local business. Bob previously served as a Chester County Commissioner, including 4 years as chairman of the board of commissioners. He also was a member and chairman of the board of directors of the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority, and a vice president of Fidelity Bank.

Bob has also been a member of the board of the Chester County Hospital, the Chester County Historical Society, the Chester County unit of the American Cancer Society, and the YMCA of Central Chester County. He was cofounder of an adolescent suicide prevention group and serves on the board of the Chester County Youth Expo.

He is an elder of the First Presbyterian Church of West Chester and a member of the Rotary Club of Westtown-Goshen.

Bob Thompson is the rare individual who can undertake a business career, public service, and civic involvement and be successful with each endeavor. I commend him for his achievements and wish him and his wife, Nancy, much happiness for their future.

DISTRICT CHAMPS

HON. MARTIN FROST

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to announce that the Ferris Yellow Jackets from Ferris, TX, are State High School Class 3A State Basketball Champions. The Yellow Jackets, led by Coach James Rogers, were an impressive 31–3 on their way to the school's first State championship. For the past 2 years, I had the pleasure to pay tribute to two other champions in my district—The Paul Lawrence Dunbar Wildcats who were the 1993 Class 5A State Basketball Champions and the Waxahachie Indians who were 1992 Class 4A State Football Champions. I am very proud of all the district champs.

The entire Ferris community has been longing for a State championship for sometime and this year's championship has been cause for great celebration in both the school and the community. This achievement is a prime example of what our young people can achieve given the determination and encouragement. This was Coach Rogers' 13th season as head coach for Ferris, and it turned out to be a lucky year for him.

All of Ferris is proud of their accomplishment. I salute the members: coaches—James Rogers, Mike Russell, Randy Waggoner; players—Vernon Butler, Pedro Tyejo, Jeremy Sims, Roman Barnes, Tyson Hollywood, Alonzo Harrison, Kendrick Cherry, Casey Greene, Jonathan Spence, Robert Brown, Kris Salas, Kyle Rogers, Jason Runnels, Kurt Harrison, and Tracy Johnson.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor TheatreWorks on the occasion of it being presented with the 1994 Tall Tree Outstanding Organization Award by the Palo Alto Chamber of Commerce.

TheatreWorks is the San Francisco Peninsula's largest and most critically acclaimed performing arts organization. Founded in 1970 by Artistic Director Robert Kelly, the company serves over 90,000 theatergoers throughout the bay area during its season of 12 plays and musicals. It is a theater of all ages and races, unique in its dedication to multi-culturalism. TheatreWorks is a major cultural asset to the Palo Alto community and contributes in many ways. It encourages community participation, creates special opportunities for groups such as seniors and children, trains artists, and forges partnerships with school and other organizations.

Mr. Speaker, TheatreWorks is an outstanding organization and has made a substantial contribution to the lasting enhancement of Palo Alto. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting it for receiving the coveted 1994 Tall Tree Outstanding Organization Award.

TRIBUTE TO JUSTIN HART

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a distinguished young man from Rhode Island who has attained the rank of Eagle Scout in the Boy Scouts of America. He is Justin Hart of Troop 1284 in Warwick, RI and he is honored this week for his noteworthy achievement.

Not every young American who joins the Boy Scouts earns the prestigious Eagle Scout Award. In fact, only 2.5 percent of all Boy Scouts do. To earn the award, a Boy Scout must fulfill requirements in the areas of leadership, service, and outdoor skills. He must earn 21 Merit Badges, 11 of which are required from areas such as citizenship in the community, citizenship in the Nation, citizenship in the world, safety, environmental science, and first aid.

As he progresses through the Boy Scout ranks a Scout must demonstrate participation in increasingly more responsible service projects. He must also demonstrate leadership skills by holding one or more specific youth leadership positions in his patrol and/or troop. This young man has distinguished himself in accordance with these criteria.

For his Eagle Scout project, Justin raised the funds and built a shed at the Apponaug Bambino little league field in Warwick.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in saluting Eagle Scout Justin Hart. In turn, we must duly recognize the Boy Scouts of America for establishing the Eagle Scout Award and the strenuous criteria its aspirants must meet. This program has through its 80 years honed and enhanced the leadership skills and commitment to public service of many outstanding Americans, two dozen of whom now serve in the House.

It is my sincere belief that Justin Hart will continue his public service and in so doing will further distinguish himself and consequently better his community. I join friends, colleagues, and family who this week salute him.

LONG BEACH SHIPYARD WORKERS HELP EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

HON. STEPHEN HORN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, the employees of the Long Beach Naval Shipyard are well known for their extraordinary work ethic, their high skill level, and their considerable contribution to the Nation's security. They should also be recognized for their strong compassion for their fellow citizens and their willingness to make significant sacrifices to help those in need.

In the wake of the earthquake centered in Northridge, CA on January 17, approximately 200 Long Beach Naval Shipyard employees responded to a January 21 request for assistance from the Office of Personnel Management [OPM]. They volunteered their services at disaster assistance centers throughout those areas that had been devastated by the earthquake.

When the OPM call came in, supervisors were immediately contacted, and they in turn set in motion a phone tree process to contact their employees in order to obtain volunteers. Workers were told that they would be taking applications for relief from the earthquake victims. They were also told that volunteers would be working approximately 12 hours a day, 7 days a week, for up to 20 days and that they were to report for an orientation session the next day.

The calls to employees continued late into the night on the 21st and then throughout the next morning. The response was overwhelming and gratifying. Over 200 shipyard employees volunteered. They attended the orientation session on the 22d and the majority began work the next day.

These employees began working in centers in Reseda, Hollywood, Santa Clarita, Santa Monica, Northridge, and anywhere else they were needed. One group of employees working at the center in Reseda reported taking in over 800 applications in one day. Fortunately, many of the Long Beach Naval Shipyard volunteers are bilingual, which proved especially helpful to many non-English speaking people in some of the hardest hit areas.

Also, because of the variety of skills the Long Beach volunteers possess, they were called on to perform many other services. For example, when rain was predicted, one group worked late into the night putting up tents to provide shelter to many of the thousands left homeless by the quake.

Disasters sometimes have a way of revealing the best in people. The volunteers from the Long Beach Naval Shipyard worked very long hours in difficult circumstances because they simply wanted to help. There was a need and they responded willingly.

This commitment to help their fellow citizens following the earthquake reflects the commitment, dedication, and compassion which is personified in all of these talented individuals. The spirit they showed in this emergency is the same spirit they have demonstrated in their consistent commitment to excellence in their work at the Long Beach Naval Shipyard.

In closing, I would like to include a short article from the January 25 edition of the San Pedro News-Pilot.

[From the San Pedro News-Pilot, Jan. 25, 1994]

SHIPYARD CREWS GIVE QUAKE AID

Approximately 200 employees at the Long Beach Naval Shipyard on Terminal Island have volunteered their services to the Federal Emergency Management Agency to help displaced victims of the Northridge earthquake.

The volunteers will remain at various FEMA centers until they no longer are needed.

The Office of Personnel Management called the shipyard Friday to ask for volunteers; then supervisors and union officials were contacted.

In turn, they called employees at home. Those who volunteered attended a training session Saturday in Pasadena and began helping Sunday.

HONORING GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY AND THE IMPORTANCE OF GREEK HERITAGE TO AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, as you may know March 25 is Greek Independence Day. This day is important to all Americans because it commemorates the unique bond Greeks share in our commitment to democracy. The democracy that originated in Greece 2,500 years ago, was the inspiration of our Founding Fathers when creating our democratic system. As Members of Congress, serving in this body born out of Greek ideals, Greek Independence Day will be a celebration of our common bond to liberty and freedom. To this day, my constituents of Greek descent are proud of the influence their heritage has had on this country—and so am I.

It is very appropriate as we salute Greece's past that we also salute the strong bonds between us in the present and the future. Greece and the United States have developed close ties, as members of NATO and the European Community. Let us continue to honor these ties and work to strengthen them by celebrating with Greek Americans on March 25.

CONGRATULATIONS AND THANKS TO NORTON YOUNGLOVE

HON. KEN CALVERT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, the county of Riverside, CA has been extremely fortunate during its history to have many dedicated citizens who have been willing to contribute their time and talents to help make our community an exceptionally good place in which to live and work. For the better part of four decades, one of the most dedicated and active of these citizens has been Mr. Norton Younglove.

Mr. Younglove is a native of Riverside. He was born in 1929, and attended local public schools before traveling to Oregon to obtain his BA in public administration and political science at Willamette University. After a stint in the U.S. Army Signal Corps in Korea, Norton returned to Riverside to work several years in his family's oil business before beginning a career as a teacher of government and history at Sierra Junior High and Ramona High School in Riverside. A decade later, Norton Younglove decided to put in practice the lessons about government that he had learned and taught.

Norton was first elected to the Riverside County Board of Supervisors in 1971, and has served in that position continuously ever since. For nearly a quarter of a century in office he has helped guide our county through an era of unprecedented progress. During that time, he has striven to be fair to everyone, and has worked diligently to manage rapid growth and development to keep it from destroying the natural assets which have attracted so many people to our area of southern California.

Norton has always believed that his job of representing the people of Riverside County entailed much more than attending board meetings and casting votes. He has involved himself in a myriad of activities at the county, regional, and State levels. These include serving as: chairman of the Riverside County Flood Control and Water Conservation District; a founding member of the board of directors of the Riverside Transit Agency; chairman of the Habitat Conservation District; executive board member of the Inland Manpower Association; past member of the governing body of the Inland Counties Health Systems Agency; member of the Regional Airport Authority; former board member of the Inland Empire Labor Management Council; former chairman of the County Supervisors Association of California; founding chairman of the California Association of Councils of Government; and a member of the southern California earthquake preparedness project, policy advisory board.

For his entire adult life, no one has worked harder or contributed more than Mr. Norton Younglove to make Riverside County a community of which we all can be proud. On March 25, 1994, Norton will be recognized for his service to our community by being named the Citizen of the Year by the Riverside Rotary Club. On behalf of the citizens of the 43d Congressional District, I want to add to this tribute my thanks and congratulations, and to wish Norton, his wife Ardith, and their three sons and five grandchildren best wishes for a happy and productive future.

INTERSTATE MUNICIPAL SOLID WASTE CONTROL ACT

HON. RICK SANTORUM

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues from Pennsylvania in introducing important bipartisan legislation to help our State address its growing problems with out-of-State municipal waste. I would particularly like to commend Congressmen JIM GREENWOOD, JACK MURTHA, BILL CLINGER, and JOE MCDADE for their leadership in this effort.

Back in 1992, I joined many of my Pennsylvania colleagues in writing to congressional leadership urging them to break the gridlock that has blocked action on this issue for so many years. I reiterate that plea today: we must act to give States a voice in limiting interstate waste shipments.

This bill will give the Governors, in consultation with local communities, the authority to restrict interstate waste shipments.

Pennsylvania imports far more municipal waste than any other State. In 1993 alone, nearly 4 million tons of waste was shipped into our State for disposal. Almost 2 million tons of waste was shipped to Pennsylvania from New York, and another 1.3 million tons came from New Jersey. According to the waste management industry, this waste is brought to our State because "the political and economic costs of disposal in the generating state become so high that it is 'less expensive' to transport [waste] to other states." In other words, since other States cannot find the political willpower to make hard decisions about where to place their landfills, they choose the easy way out and ship their waste to Pennsylvania.

I believe that the time has come to give Pennsylvania and other States the power to say "no" to the huge shipments of interstate waste that cross our borders every day.

Federal laws require States to develop plans for comprehensive State management of municipal waste. These plans can include programs to reduce waste and require recycling. But, citing the Interstate Commerce Clause of the Constitution, courts have repeatedly overturned State plans to limit interstate waste shipments. As a result, Governors are virtually powerless to control or restrict out-of-State waste. It is time to close this loophole.

For Pennsylvania, this legislation is important because it will give us the ability to comprehensively manage all municipal solid waste in our State. For our neighbors, enactment of this legislation will mean that their political "free-ride" is over. These States will have to find ways to manage their own waste problems without pushing it across our borders.

25TH ANNIVERSARY OF WTOP RADIO

HON. LESLIE L. BYRNE

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mrs. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, recently all of us in the Washington metropolitan area had the pleasure of listening to the highlights of news coverage for the past 25 years as Washington's premier all-news radio station, WTOP, celebrated its anniversary.

On March 10, 1969, WTOP Radio launched its all-news format and has for a quarter century served the Washington area with responsible and accurate news coverage of local and national events.

The high standards of this radio station must be credited to its outstanding writing and reporting staff. WTOP has launched the careers of many broadcasting greats like Walter Cronkite, Connie Chung, and Sam Donaldson to name a few.

And, as Members of Congress, we have the good fortune of working with WTOP's Capitol Hill Correspondent, Dave McConnell. I begin every workday with Dave McConnell's reports from Capitol Hill, and I know that many of my colleagues do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank WTOP Radio for providing a great public service. May the next 25 years be as successful as the first.

TUFTS IS FOREVER

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to make our colleagues aware of an important even that will be taking place the week of April 21.

The year 1994 signifies the 10th annual celebration of Turftonia's Week. This is a special time for the over 75,000 Tufts alumni who gather in groups throughout the world to take part in Tuftonia's week festivities. From Somerville to Saigon, Wyckoff to Warsaw, and Albuquerque to Ankara, thousands of graduates come together to pay tribute to their alma mater and to remember the good times that they shared as fellow Tuftonians.

Tuftonia's Week is named after the venerable Tufts football fight song written by E.W. Hayes, class of 1916. Through the continual and widespread involvement of the Tufts community, this celebration captures the same sense of spirit and vitality for which this song was written. In honor of this special 10th anniversary commemoration, our male a capella singing group, the Beelzebubs, will join in the festivities as they entertain alumni on an Amtrak railroad trip which begins in Boston and travels down the Northeast corridor until reaching its final destination in our Nation's Capital.

Tufts University was founded in 1852 and enrolls approximately 7,900 students from all 50 States and 109 countries. As a Tufts alum, I am deeply honored to congratulate this outstanding institution and its loyal alumni for their continued achievements in public and community service. I ask my colleagues to join me in urging their Tufts alumni constituents to participate in this year's Tuftonia's Week celebrations.

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED TO CONSTRUCT A NEW FEDERAL COURTHOUSE IN THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS

HON. GEORGE E. SANGMEISTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. SANGMEISTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to introduce a bill legislating the creation of a new Federal courthouse and division in the northern district of Illinois. This courthouse, located in Joliet, would serve a newly created southern division within the northern district of Illinois. It would be comprised of Grundy, Kendall, La Salle, and Will Counties. The counties of Cook, Du Page, Kane, and Lake would remain within the district's eastern division.

The idea for establishing a suburban Federal district courthouse originally arose at the State bar level at a board of governors meeting over a year ago as a way to deal with the problem of overcrowding. A number of local bar associations, including those in Grundy, Kendall, La Salle, and Will Counties, became interested in the project, and have since urged me to help them turn their idea into a reality.

The demographics of south and west suburban Chicago have changed dramatically over the last decade. The population has increased much faster than in other areas and, as a result, more legal activity has followed. From 1980 to 1990, the combined population of Grundy, Kendall, La Salle and Will Counties has increased from 504,277 to 535,976, a total of 6 percent. The U.S. Census Bureau predicts that by 1997, the population of these four counties will increase another 11 percent. This is a total of 17 percent in less than two decades. In comparison, the combined population of Cook, Du Page, Kane, and Lake Counties only increased 1 percent in the 10 years from 1980 to 1990, and is expected to rise a mere 2 percent by 1997.

Furthermore, Will County is the fourth largest county in Illinois, with Cook being the largest. With the vast majority of northern Illinois' population located in this area, it stands to reason that legal activity would be high. Presently, the western division of the northern district has two courthouses to handle the heavy caseload generated by the 10 counties within its division The entire central district of Illinois has six courthouses and the southern district has four.

However, with only one Federal courthouse for the eastern division, located in Chicago, serving an eight-county area with a population of more than 7.2 million people, caseload problems are exacerbated. A new courthouse for this area would, without question, allow for improved efficiency, convenient access for local residents, and a reduced caseload for the Chicago district court system.

An ongoing expansion project in the Dirksen Federal Building will eventually provide additional courtrooms. However, according to a spokesperson with the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, even the completion of the expansion project will not sufficiently address the problems associated with overcrowding. It's time for our court system to accommodate this shift in population.

Situated in the heavily populated, fast-growing Will County, the city of Joliet is a natural choice. Another advantage of the Joliet location is its easy accessibility to all of the counties in the newly proposed southern district. For example, those attorneys presently practicing in the southwest corner of the eastern division would find it much more convenient to practice in a forum within 1 hour's drive, as opposed to being forced to travel nearly 2 hours, one way, to file a case or attend a court date in downtown Chicago.

This initiative, in my opinion, is a crucial step toward alleviating the weighty caseload congesting the Chicago Federal court system. It is my belief that the introduction of this bill will alert people to the necessity of this urgent community need and ultimately will lead to the construction of a new Federal courthouse for the people in the southwestern suburbs of Chicago.

Most county bar associations in the eastern division agree that something needs to be done to resolve this problem. The question remains as to where would be the best location to house additional court facilities. It is my fervent hope that we make the right choice—the responsible choice.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Marge Collins on the occasion of her being presented with the 1994 Tall Tree Outstanding Professional Award by the Palo Alto Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, Marge Collins is an outstanding professional with an unswerving commitment to her students and public service. Her work is exemplary and she is a model for others to emulate. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting her on this auspicious occasion of receiving the coveted 1994 Tall Tree Outstanding Professional Award.

TRIBUTE TO JAMIE R. VILLANUEVA

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a distinguished young man from Rhode Island who has attained the rank of Eagle Scout in the Boy Scouts of America. He is Jamie R. Villanueva of Troop 13 in West Warwick, RI, and he is honored this week for his noteworthy achievement.

Not every young American who joins the Boy Scouts earns the prestigious Eagle Scout Award. In fact, only 2.5 percent of all Boy Scouts do. As he progresses through the Boy Scout ranks, a Scout must demonstrate participation in increasingly more responsible service projects. He must also demonstrate leadership positions in his patrol and/or troop. This young man has distinguished himself in accordance with these criteria.

For his Eagle Scout project, Jamie cleaned the walls and living area and waxed the floors at a local shelter called the Warwick House of Hope.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in saluting Eagle Scout Jamie R. Villanueva. In turn, we must duly recognize the Boy Scouts of America for establishing the Eagle Scout Award and the strenuous criteria its aspirants must meet. This program has through its 80 years honed and enhanced the leadership skills and commitment to public service of many outstanding Americans, two dozen of who now serve in the House.

It is my sincere belief that Jamie R. Villaneuva will continue his public service and in so doing will further distinguish himself and consequently better his community. I join friends, colleagues, and family who this week salute him.

VOICE OF DEMOCRACY WINNER

HON. EARL HUTTO

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, my constituent, Stacey Boozer of Panama City, FL is a State winner in the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U.S. "Voice of Democracy" broadcast scriptwriting contest. I am pleased to submit the following winning script written by Stacey Boozer.

> As a teenager, I feel a strong commitment to America because I know that I am a part of its future. My generation will soon be taxpayers, voters, and members of the work force. We will be running this Nation in a matter of years. We need to be equipped to use the concepts that made this country great: patriotism, benevolence, pride, and democracy.
> I will be able to vote in a year. This is important to me because I want to have a say in the government that is supposed to represent me. I want to pick candidates who feel the way I do about taxes, the economy, and social issues. Though I am still young, I know what I want the government to do about moral issues like abortion, prayer in public schools, and education. I feel that far too many people remain silent when voting season rolls around because they are unprepared to participate. They don't know who stands for what, or sometimes, even what they themselves stand for. They prefer to remain a part of the "silent majority," who let others run the world for them. Voting is about taking a stand for what you believe in and who you believe in. I am interested in voting because I want my opinions to count. I want to be a part of my government and have my fair say. I feel that I am ready to analyze any candidates and make responsible decisions. A democracy relies on informed, active citizens. We can't change anything unless we make an effort to try.
> I plan to major in elementary education in college because my heart is yearning to teach young children. Like myself, children are the future of America. Their visions will form this country into what it will become. I want to teach our children about their world and how to be responsible Americans. I want to instill in them the same concepts of patriotism that I received in kindergarten, as I recited the Pledge of Allegiance. This patriotism is what our forefathers intended for everyone to have. I want to make a difference in the way our future society will view their part in our nation when it is their turn to lead. My generation has been stereotyped as a careless, apathetic generation with little concern about government or the economy. I must admit that in many cases this is true. As a nation we rank far below other growing nations like Japan, Germany, and England in our test scores and output as students. At the same time, we are at the top when it comes to self-confidence. In the words of T.V. talk show host, ". . . we are a nation of proud dumbbells." I resent that opinion and want to change it. Unfortunately, there is a great apathy among my peers. Most teens don't care about politics or news unless it affects them personally. I want to reach out and show them that everything that happens to our nation will and does affect them personally. I want to do something to change the world's opinion of American teens. I do care and I know that there are many others who are ready and willing to make a difference in our society.

In the future I hope to impact the lives of American children. In the meantime, I shall try to set an example to my peers who are indifferent toward their nation and show them how important we are to the future of America and our world. We are the future of America. It is our responsibility to keep America the great nation that it is and to be prepared to be reliable citizens.

TRIBUTE TO COMDR. RAY B. NIXON

HON. GARY A. CONDIT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend Comdr. Ray B. Nixon, for his exemplary service to the United States of America. Commander Nixon, a native of Panama City, FL, is a graduate of McKendree College in Lebanon, IL. He served in the U.S. Air Force from 1967 to 1971, assigned to the 6987th Security Group in Taipei, Taiwan.

In 1974, he joined the Navy and was commissioned under the Aviation Officer Candidate School in Pensacola, FL. Following flight training, he served as a naval flight officer with Tactical Electron Warfare Squadron 132 from 1976 to 1978, and was qualified a mission commander. Upon designation as a naval cryptologist in 1978, he was assigned to U.S. Naval Security Group Activity Misawa, Japan, where he served as a direct support officer, operation watch officer, and the enciphered communications division officer.

In 1981, Commander Nixon reported to Naval Security Group Activity, Pyongtaek, Republic of South Korea, as executive officer. From that assignment he went to U.S. Naval Security Group Activity, Edzell, Scotland, where he was the processing and reporting officer from 1982 to 1984. His next tour was with Commander Carrier Group Six where he served as the staff cryptologist until 1986. He went next to Naval Technical Training Center, Corry Station in Pensacola, where he was the fleet advanced systems training division officer and the base support department head.

In 1988 Commander Nixon reported to Rota, Spain, as officer in charge, Cryptologic Support Group 6th Fleet. He assumed command of Naval Security Group Activity, Key West in August in 1991.

Mr. Speaker, Commander Nixon has been awarded the Meritorious Service Medal, Navy Commendation Medal, and the Navy Achievement Medal with gold star, in addition to various service medals and ribbons. I rise to honor his achievements and thank him upon his retirement from the U.S. Navy.

VOTES REGARDING THE ISSUE OF SCHOOL PRAYER

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, on February 23, 1994, I voted against a motion to instruct the House conferees to accept an amendment offered by the senior Senator from the State of South Carolina to H.R. 1804, the Goals 2000 legislation, which had been accepted in the other body by a vote of 75 to 22.

Specifically, the amendment states that:

> No funds made available through the Department of Education under this Act, or any other Act, shall be available to any state or Local Education Agency which has a policy of denying, or which effectively prevents participation in, constitutionally protected prayer in public schools by individuals on a voluntary basis. Neither the United States nor any state nor any Local Education Agency shall require any person to participate in prayer or influence the form or content of any constitutionally protected prayer in such public schools.

I would like to state at this point, however, that on February 23, 1994, I voted erroneously—a conclusion I came to after a careful review of my position and of my past votes.

A review of my record on this matter will show that on May 9, 1989, I supported an amendment to the Vocational Education Reauthorization which was almost identical to the amendment stated above. Specifically, the amendment would have allowed voluntary prayer in school. I do not know of any other instances since May 9, 1989, on which this issue has been addressed on the House floor.

As the record should indicate, I also voted today in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. SAM JOHNSON, which again mirrors the language which was approved in the other body.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this clarifies my position on the issue.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 21, 1994

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, my constituent, David Hurst of Pensacola, FL, is a State winner in the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U.S. "Voice of Democracy" broadcast scriptwriting contest. I am pleased to submit the following winning script written by David Hurst.

Commitment. Webster says, "A pledge or promise to do something." A commitment is a decision to do something for another for no other reason than love for them. Some commitments are not initiated by the receiver, they are made freely, without obligation of return, by the giver. These are, perhaps, the highest of all commitments. The other type of commitment is reciprocal, in other words, both parties involved do something for the other. I would like to say my commitment to America would be of the first type, that I would love America without hope of anything in return. But I cannot make that statement because my country has done so much for me: so much that everything I do in return cannot begin to replace it.

What has America given to me and the many millions who have been her citizens? A heritage of freedom, a past that reminds us of our liberty, and patriots who have fought and died for that cause. A prosperous economy, a land blessed with great bounty, provision for a high standard of living, and a chance for success for those who will work hard for it. Freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of assembly, freedom of worship, and every part of the Bill of Rights. Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness from our Declaration of Independence. And most importantly, the freedom to do what I believe is morally right within the bounds of human law.

This list gives just an idea of what my country provides. These conditions give me incentive not only to be a law-abiding citizen, but also to make commitments to give back what I have been given. I hope that my personal commitments will challenge you to take the privilege of being an American more seriously.

My first and most important commitment to America is moral. More and more today, Americans are being encouraged to defy authority. This is seen so vividly in the crime rate and its increase. As a committed American, I will seek to obey the laws of the land as they are established by government.

The second of my commitments is mental; I will learn why America is great from her past. I will look for the principles in the lives of her founding fathers, in her foundational documents, and in the historical events that have fed her growth. I will learn from the men who have sacrificed for my country and seek to make their commitments mine.

The third of my commitments is educational. My education is so important to my future commitments to America. To be the best citizen possible I must take full advantage of my educational opportunities. Great men of the past have made great commitments in the area of education; through what has been provided for them or their own initiative to teach themselves. To give America my best later, I must learn all I can now in math, science, writing skills, critical reading, government, and economics.

My fourth commitment is informational; that is, I will be informed on present issues of importance to my country. A citizen who is not informed and knowledgeable about problems cannot be a part of their solution. Voting is another part of being an informed citizen. Intelligent choices are made by informed citizens, not those who ignore the facts.

My fifth commitment is vocational. I will work for a prosperous, economically sound country. Whatever my job, I will work hard to reach my goals, and provide economic means for others. I will use the benefits of capitalism as a means of achievement economically. This also involves personal service if my country should ask for it. I will be willing to give my life so that others may experience the freedom I enjoy.

My sixth and last commitment is societal. I will be involved in areas of service to make others happier and more successful. I will try to give others knowledge and insight I have gained in my life. This is an area of commitment especially important in my latter years as young people need the advice of those with experience.

I hope you have been challenged to make pledges to America in each of these areas. Even if others lose their love for her, America has my solemn promise that I will stand firm in my commitments. Fellow patriots, take the challenge and commit yourself to "the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, March 22, 1994, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
